MISCELLANY.

THE THREE CHIMNIES.

"There are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in our philosophy."—Shakespeare.

It is about ten, or it may be, fifteen years ago that the merchants and mariners of the pleasant city of P., on our eastern coast, were surprised to encounter every day in the most crowded thoroughfares of the city and about the wharves, a young woman of a singularly quiet and abstracted appearance, who inquired as to the last arrivals from sea and some particulars respecting the voyage.

When questioned as to the peculiar interest she thus manifested, her replies were evasive, or she answered coldly that she was looking for a friend. Upon the entrance of a vessel into the harbor, Judith, for so she was called, might be seen making her way to the ship, and casting eager and searching glances among the officers. Her scrutiny seemed never to satisfy her; she departed with a slow and melancholy air, like one suffering from the sickness of 'dear'd hope.'

Her dress was usually a plain blue calico frock, a small shawl, which she held with a grasp across the chest, and a straw cottage hat without trimmings, being simply tied with a ribbon under the chin. Her figure was somewhat tall, slender, yet firmly and elegantly made. Her hair was black, abundant, crisped; her features distinctly chiseled; her eyes deep set and brown, whose expression was that of melancholy tenderness. Indeed with a nose slightly approaching the Roman, nostrils veiled and distinct, lips red, but not full, it will be seen that the profile of her face must have been one of artistic force and beauty, while the front view might seem too clearly and sharply defined to please the common eye. Her whole manner, the small brown ungloved hand, the elastic step, the proud curve of the neck, all betrayed an exquisite physique, a high toned organization, supposed to belong exclusively to gentle blood.

Although she had appeared in the manner we have described amid the crowds frequenting the docks of a commercial city for nearly a year, and often many times in the course of a day, there was no material change in her appearance. She rarely spoke to any one, and if encountered by rudeness would glide aside, or turn upon the aggressor an eye so full of sadness, yet with such a kindling indignation in its depths, that the offender retired with shame.

One morning Judith was observed watching with intense interest the motions of the captain of a barque arrived from some European port. He was leaning over the top rail carelessly watching the play of the waters beneath him, while the crew were making ready to discharge the cargo of the ship. She sprang lightly over the side, crossing the deck, and touched her fingers upon his shoulder. The man looked around and his hard, weather-beaten features relaxed to a smile as he glanced at the intruder.

But there was a fixedness of expression, a pallidness and dignity about the girl, which repelled all levity, and he gazed upon her as if powerless to withdraw his regard. She uttered a few words in that concentrated tone designed to reach the ear of one only.

"Did you more than a year ago, pass on the high seas a vessel which had hung out a signal of distress?"

The captain's face changed to ghastly paleness, but he answered not a word.

"You did—you passed over that vast thoroughfare, and when there was no sound upon its great solitude, save one low, human wail, wrung out from the famished and dying, you stopped your ear to that sound and went on your way. God do so to you and more also," and she raised her finger upward.

The captain stood with his eyes fixed upon the spot she had occupied for many moments after she was gone; and his lips moved with the impotence of one struggling for language in a dream.

From that time Judith appeared no more as she had done in the thoroughfares of the city, and the memory of her gradually died out, or was only revived at some association when the tale of love torn maiden was told at quarter-deck or fore-castle, and she became the subject of surmise and recollection.

Seven years had elapsed and captain Durgin, of whom we have spoken, had enjoyed an uninterrupted career of success. His voyages were made with speed and safety, and the markets every where seemed regulated as if especially to accommodate him. Though a rough unpopular man with his crew, and the subject of many and severe calumnies he braved every thing with the same gruff hardihood with which he met the perils of the element to which he seemed native. Despite a certain ferocity of demeanor, he had a bluff good nature, able at any time to efface any prior disagreeable impression. Sailors were averse to shipping with him, without any well defined reasons for being so, and yet when once in his service, his good cheer and consummate seamanship made it rather satisfactory than otherwise.

There was a vague rumor of a ship left on the high sea dismantled and the crew imploring succor, which [Captain Durgin had disregarded, and this fact was of itself enough to make him generally odious, every sailor feeling instinctively that the time of retribution must and would come—a retribution that might involve the innocent with the guilty. Gradually however, these prejudices gave way under the continued success of the captain, as it is the way of the world to imagine that prosperity is only the attendant of virtue, that guilt and debasement and suffering and poverty go hand in hand.

There was another circumstance which helped to redeem the character of Captain Durgin. For the last seven years the second officer of his ship had been a man of such peculiar excellence, of such singular activity in business and great devotedness to the interests of the captain, that he inspired all about him with confidence. Thomas Harper had refused the most flattering offers of promotion, from a blind adherence to the fortunes of his commander.

Though courteous in his bearing, he was reserved, taciturn, and often seemed weighed by a deep melancholy. Superstitious, as sailors proverbially are, Harper seemed to have more than ordinary share, believing in dreams and omens, lucky and unlucky days; adapting his actions often to these indications, so singularly subtle in their influence that indulgence often arms them with almost omnipotent power.

Harper seemed thoroughly acquainted with the whole history of the captain, who being naturally boastful and talkative, oft found himself regaled by the attentive silence of the subaltern into details and disclosures, which, it would seem, might be for his interest to conceal. Often when relating voyages of peril and disaster, of escapes from piracies and death, and giving histories of his own varied enterprises, the nature of which was of more than doubtful justice, the hardy seaman would rudely arrest his own loquacity, and with a half-irritated and half-humorous air exclaim,

"Why, Harper, what the deuce is in you, you get everything out of a fellow. If my neck ever finds the hemp round it, you are the man to bring it there."

"You've nothing to fear from me, captain; for my part I think there is more of terror in the few words, 'whatsoever measure ye mete shall be measured to you again,' than any other kind of retribution."

The captain arose hastily from his seat, and paced up and down the cabin with an appearance of strange uneasiness. He whistled a tune, justified even to a sailor's ear by the long calm with which they were threatened—he looked out upon the man at the helm and then unrolled a ragged chart, which he examined without any well defined motive unless to divert unpleasant thoughts. At length he remarked, without lifting his eyes from the paper,

"Harper, I wish you'd have done bringing up that ugly passage; I see no good in it."

"Why so, captain?"

"Why so, man? why a body isn't bound to give his reasons for everything he thinks, but somehow or other, you fish a fellow's thoughts out of his very soul. I remember, too, a girl who brought up just such thoughts once; I suppose 'twas a girl, for as to that she had an eye that burned like a coal. I hate a woman who gets her head filled with books—somehow she is sure to give every thing a twist."

CHAPTER II.

"I've tracked the poor bewildered thing, wherever he was famishing, and snatched him o'er and o'er again. From death he sought by field and flood."—Vigil of Faith.

The calm remained unbroken by day, and Captain Durgin, naturally irritable and goaded by the slightest impediment, was now more than usually uneasy. A dread of impending evil seemed to have fastened upon his mind, which the conversation of Harper by no means served to allay. Indeed the latter himself was more than wontedly abstracted, and passed hours pouring over an old chart, or reading passages of Scripture full of the fearfulness of denunciation upon evil doers.

One day the captain looked over his shoulder, after he had completed an observation which satisfied him as to their position, and said, with affected carelessness, for the lividness of his cheek betrayed strong internal excitement—

"Harper, we are somewhere in the reckoning of the Three Chimnies, and this current with a dead calm drifts us, heaven knows where."

"An ugly berth, that of the Three Chimnies, captain; I'm thinking you have been here before."

A pair of dividers dropped from the man's hand, and he whispered through his shut teeth, "once."

But the existence of these Chimnies has been doubted by many experienced navigators," said Harper, carelessly.

At this moment a voice from above cried, "Breakers—breakers!"

"The Chimnies, on my soul," cried the Captain, hurrying on deck.

The whole sea was smooth as molten glass, slightly heaved by long swells from an under current, which caused the surface to rise and fall without displacing a particle. The sky was free from speck or cloud, the air like powdered gold, and the long reach of ocean objectless, save at one point three tall spires shot up into the sky, like the masts of a ship, and a line of white foam flecked the base of them.

"This current will take us in those rocks, Harper, just as surely as they show their gallow-like shapes there. We're as good as dead men," said the captain.

"That matters little," returned Harper, "for this calm has nearly done the business with our provisions, and to my mind, a dash upon those old tombstones yonder, would be better than to starve here, like rats in a hole."

"I never fear that, somehow," returned the captain. "I've been on short allowance many's the time, but a ship has always crossed my path and relieved us."

"Yes, but men have perished in this wise, and that too in sight of others laden with plenty. Captain I once had a dream."

"Pshaw! Harper, none of your dreams, now."

As the man said this he seemed to be convulsed by some strong emotion, which he struggled to suppress, and he raised the glass to examine the singular trio which sentinelled the horizon. They were from eighty to a hundred feet in the air, stern, basaltic giants, against whom a reach of ocean thousands of miles in extent, beat upon every side, and yet they held a footing that seemed to press the centre of the earth. The elements crowned them with fearful glory—the mist hung around them robes of down—the rainbow girded them with beauty—the white foam kissed them in wild gladness—the moon came down and slept with them—and the sun hung his last coronal upon their brows. Terrible were these Titans of the Atlantic, standing mute, solemn and apart. All hands and all tongues had offered victims at their altar. The slim canoe drifted from her path, cast its shivered burden at their feet—the Tyrian form eddied its purple wealth beneath them—the Norwegian, the German, the Italian and the Spaniard, each and all had brought their tribute. In later days the proudest testimonials of man's power, wealth and ingenuity, swelled the pomp of their terrific grandeur. Half way amid the waste of waters they held their solitary state, drawing to themselves by an insidious current many a gallant barque, whose pale inmates looked up to their stony heads hopeless of pity. Like the ocean, in which they have planted a throne, they spurn the foot-prints of men, and the great wreck of water shall find them recordless as now.

The captain stood with his eyes fixed upon the huge pillars, raised to commemorate nothing of man's glory, and he saw the sun-set light, bronzed and scorching, mount their sides and tremble upon their tops; there they stood gray and heavy against the sky, till the moon came up behind them and by its glare seemed to project the monsters forward as if to crush the devoted barque.

Slowly he turned to his companion. "Harper, I'm a doomed man. 'Tis all over with me."

"Your time is not yet come, captain," said the mate. "Our ship is in prime order, a calm cannot last long in this latitude, and I see no reason why you should not escape this time—but if there be any truth in dreams—"

The captain this time did not utter his accustomed note of contempt, but looked fixedly in the eyes of the mate, who changing his manner, added lightly, "other men, captain, have seen the Chimnies and escaped; and why not we, to give their exact bearing upon the charts."

"Harper, I know of one vessel which could not have escaped them, and we are drifting down in the same way."

The mate laid his hand respectfully but yet with a firm grasp upon the arm of his superior, and replied slowly,

"But that barque was a dismantled rolling hulk, and the men were starving."

The captain quailed a moment before the rigid look of the mate, and then his native hardihood coming to his aid, he answered,

"Harper, I believe you were one of those men; I am right glad the vessel escaped, but mind that you never bring up the subject to me again—dye hear, Harper; never blab to me again, or," and his face grew black with suppressed rage, "the sea will hold one more secret, and that never blabs."

Harper turned away, but as he did so, he broke into a laugh so hollow, so unearthly, that the captain laid his hand upon his left, as if to grasp some deadly instrument, but in a moment Harper bowed coolly to his superior, and passed to another part of the ship.

It was a fearful thing, that vessel ably manned, complete in all her parts, ruled by the most skillful seamanship, with rope and spar and helm obedient to the master mind, yet all made of no avail by an invisible agent, born amid iceberg and whirlpool. Vainly was the prow turned aside, vainly every thread of canvas made to woo the breeze—it hung drooping to the mast, idle and powerless. The glossy sea and the brassy sky, were like immense radiators of heat, and the forlorn ship a victim doomed to the torture of slowly consuming fire. Onward she drifted, slowly yet surely to the foot of the Stone Giants.* Sun and moon, great unwinning eyes were they, glaring and fiery, darting torture into the brains of the half-maddened seamen.

Harper alone was concentrated and calm. His orders were direct and firm, but there was that in his bearing, which implied that he had expected no less than this. He seemed neither desperate nor resigned, but like one who met a long expected doom manfully. As their fate grew more apparent, Captain Durgin shut himself up in his cabin, leaving the whole management of the ship to Harper. Then it was that the disheartened crew broke into oaths and mutiny. They declared that the captain had brought destruction upon them by his secret crimes; and they in their innocence, were about to perish for the wickedness of this new Jonah. The very sea had refused to bear him longer upon its bosom, and they would cast him therein as a means of atonement.

CHAPTER III.

"This is certain, that a man that studieth revenge keeps his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well."—Bacon.

Harper remained undismayed through all these difficulties. He briefly ordered the men to their duty, declaring that his life should be staked for the defence of the captain's. Here indeed the secret motive of his conduct seemed to betray itself, for in a few solemn words he addressed the crew. "Whatever may have been the crimes of the captain, I am convinced that a like retribution awaits him. 'Vengeance is mine and I will repay,' saith the Lord. No one under my control shall become an agent for evil. He shall await the time of the Almighty, and the cup of trembling which he hath pressed to another's lip shall be pressed to his own, but neither your hand nor mine shall abridge the day of suffering. I have watched and waited for the time, and now it approaches."

The affection and respect with which he had inspired these rude men, added to the energy and firmness which never failed, alone gave him the ascendancy in this difficult period. Yet it might have been remarked that a more than ordinary gloom had fallen upon him, a gloom disconnected with the external evils which were in their way, for of these he spoke with singular levity, as being part of the contingencies of life, evils incident to a sailor, which strong honest hearts could meet without flinching.

In the meanwhile the attentions of Harper to the captain were unremitting; cordials and restoratives, rarely suggested by the brain of manhood, were prepared and ministered to his comfort, yet notwithstanding this the hardy seaman drooped daily. "It's of no use, Harper," he would mutter, when the latter approached with the means of sustenance, often reserved from his own scanty portion, "It's of no use, I'm a doomed man." It was singular to observe the coldness of manner of the mate as contrasted with the kind solicitude of his acts. His brief replies to the desponding words of Durgin, had in them something ominous, which sometimes caused the dying man to look with a severe scrutiny into his face, as if something like distrust had crossed his mind.

"Your time has not yet come, captain," was the only reply of the mate, to the desponding murmurings of the other.

At length when the last spark of hope was dying out in the minds of the ill-fated crew, a small, black spot about noon, a speck, as it were the size of a man's hand, was observed in the horizon. Harper sprang to the helm, and gave a few hurried orders, which were but imperfectly obeyed, for the men were overpowered with a sense of sluggish lassitude. Upwards and onward swept the black cloud, increasing in magnitude as it approached, and soon a line of turbid water shot up from the hitherto smooth sea and followed in its wake. The men looked agast, but Harper followed its path with a calm eye, bearing the ship firmly by the helm, and turning her from the Three Chimnies.

The face of Durgin glared white from the companion-way, as the howl of wind and water swept over the ship, lifting her upward, then bearing her down, down amid the gurgling waves cracking and shrieking. Slowly she arose, rolling and dismasted, a portion of her crew swept from her decks and spars and rigging cumbering her sides; but she had plunged onward in the whirlwind, leaving the Three Chimnies behind and now no longer objects of terror. The calm was over, and a bright breeze might have sent them onward rejoicing, but they were a wreck. The excitement of action restored Durgin to exertion, the dismantled ship was soon made ready to weather her fate as best she might. Added to their other ills, it was found necessary to put the crew upon 'short allowance.'

Many days they floated onward, helpless and despairing, each buckling his belt tighter and tighter to keep down the gnawings of hunger. Each saw by the gaunt aspect of his neighbors, the progress of death in himself. Few with the abundance of every-day supply before them can estimate the moral resolution of those, who goaded by hunger, are yet able to resist its cravings; few can appreciate the intellectual thus bearing down the physical man, smothering the wants of to-day that something may remain for those of to-morrow; this the lowest assertion of the immortal man grasping at the hereafter.

Durgin at times grew frantic under his sufferings, and then sunk into the lassitude of a fevered child. Not so Harper, who seemed sustained as by supernatural power. His icy calmness of manner and determined compression of lip; the intenseness of scrutiny with which he pored over the face of the captain and felt hourly his hesitating pulse, all betokened the presence of a strong motive for sustenance other than the indomitable will of manhood.

At length Captain Durgin lay upon the deck panting and emaciated to the last degree of ghastliness, his eyes half closed, and the broad chest refusing to leave with the thin breath. Harper knelt beside him, with his finger upon his pulse, and his dark penetrating eyes fixed upon the wasted form and sunken cheek of the dying man. He dropped some water upon his parched tongue and sprinkled a few drops upon his brow. He was answered by a moan of conscious pain, and the sufferer murmured,

"Let me die, Harper, you but prolong my agony."

Harper put his mouth to his ear, and replied slowly, "Whatsoever measure ye mete shall be measured to you again."

The man sprang to his elbow, and glared around with his sunken and blood-shot eyes, and then gave utterance to a long, low, piercing cry that seemed wrung from the torture of a dumb brute, rather than from the lips of manhood. He fell backward, and again Harper sprinkled the water upon his temples; he laid his finger upon his pulse and a quick smile of joy passed over his face to detect its throbbing.

The captain unclosed his eyes, and a strange light gathered in those sunken orbs, as they became fixed upon the face of the mate. He had always been remarkable for his abundant and curly hair, which he had worn somewhat long about his neck and temples. Now a few strokes of the fingers had parted it upon each side, the collar of the shirt which had hitherto been scrupulously confined, was now thrown slightly open, revealing a fair and softly turned throat.

"The girl that came to me in P—harbor," whispered Durgin.

Strange enough, with the assertion of womanhood came back all its gentle infirmities, and Judith, for she it was, burst into tears.

"Tell me how you knew of my crime," whispered the man.

Now broke out into full action the singular enthusiasm of the girl. She raised her eyes upward and answered,

"It was revealed to me by the great God in heaven."

Then seeing the captain panting for breath, she dropped the water upon his tongue, murmuring he must suffer, even as he caused others to suffer, and then in a hurried and wild accent went on—

"Years ago, I was a fond, loving girl; he whom I loved did not return at the appointed time. He never came. I wrestled in prayer to God for some sign of his fate, and he gave it me one night. I know not if I dreamed. I saw these Three Chimnies. I had never heard of their existence then, but they were in the red light and"—she grasped the arm of the dying man—"I saw a hulk floating by with starving men—he was there! Oh! God, I see always his dear, patient eyes! Then a ship laden, with joyful sails spread, came past and left them in agony to die. But a voice cried 'God do so to him and more also.' You were there, Durgin; 'thou art the man.' I beheld you in that moment, and your face was painted upon my soul. I left home, kindred, friends, all, everything, to witness the retribution of the Almighty, and now I am here and you are—she stopped shortly, and glared upon the face of the clod at her feet. There was no ear to listen to her words.

Our story is told. Shortly after the death of Durgin, the surviving crew were taken from the wreck, through whom the singular story of Judith became known. Her subsequent life of severe seclusion and remarkable religious enthusiasm is unnecessary to our story. Had she lived in the days of Catholic supremacy, Judith might have added one more saint to the calendar; but living as she did in the midst of a people cool and calculating, who estimate all matters by the gauge of utility, Judith was considered simply as a very hard tempered, solitary woman, with something like a 'kink' in the brain.—Columbian Magazine.

READING IN RAILROAD CARS. An exertion of unusual intensity, of the mind and muscles, is required, to read with satisfaction when the cars are in motion. The prolonged effort brings on a kind of dimness of sight, not unfrequently followed by pain in the forehead, from a determination of blood to that region of the brain, in the unnatural attempt to read while in rapid motion. The practice is exceedingly injurious and should be abandoned.—Medical Journal.

Hunterian Dispensary.

NO. 4 1-2 SUDBURY STREET, Boston.
Highly Important to Invalids.

SALUTARY CAUTION TO THOSE SEEKING MEDICAL AID.

THE HUNTERIAN DISPENSARY, established for the suppression of Quackery, and for the sale of genuine Medicines, offer their assistance and counsel to the sick and afflicted, knowing from experience and unequivocal knowledge that hundreds annually find a premature grave from the malpractices of unlettered and unlicensed practitioners. The records of our Dispensary are a sad proof of the above. Dishonesty and the speculation of Quacks, which continually make the most sacred science subservient to their purposes, have availed themselves of every expedient, like every other road to deception; but if there be men who are depressed and reckless, there are some whose actions are guided by the interest of their patients alone, and whom no imputation can affect.—The limits of an advertisement can hardly do justice to our subject, for it is an important one. When Celery is used in the treatment of the sexual system, before entering upon the subject he apologizes for the indecency of his subject, as if a Medical man could be reproached for soothing suffering humanity; as well might it be said to Nasseggi, that there were indecent things in anatomy, therefore we ought not to fear that we should, in our turn, be accused of immorality in thus placing before the public this appeal in behalf of the invalid. The late Sir Astley Cooper, Bart., Surgeon to his late Majesty, observed, "if one of those miserable cases could be depicted from the pulpit as an illustration of the evil effects of a vicious and intemperate course of life, it would, I think, strike the mind with more terror than all the preaching in the world." The terrible state of the patient leads to the destruction of life, and in this way, annually great numbers perish, undoubtedly the list is greatly augmented from the maltreatment and the employment of injudicious medicines.

The long experience, together with the infallible remedies to be had at the Dispensary, it is hoped will afford some protection to the invalid, and make him sensible of the benefits to be derived from an educated and experienced Physician, rather than the precarious and dangerous doings of Quacks and inexperienced Physicians.

It is not necessary here to enumerate all the diseases to which particular attention is directed, suffice it to say that all the ill-flesh is here to.

Persons in town or country can consult the attending physician either personally or by letter, enclosing the usual fee. Medicines can be sent to any part of the world, securely packed and carefully protected from observation.

All letters and communications are returned by mail or destroyed, at the option of the writer.

Physicians in the country can have the advantages of this Institution for their patients, for the usual fee.—Persons desirous of consultation, see no person but the Physician. Fee for a full course of medicine, $5. Medicines from 50 cents to $2 per box or bottle.

N. B.—All letters must be directed thus: "HUNTERIAN DISPENSARY, Boston, Mass.," where they will be faithfully and carefully attended to.

This Dispensary has no connection with any other office in this country, and all medicines purporting to come from this Dispensary and sold elsewhere, is a base fraud and deception.

Letters containing money, the postage need not be paid. The strictest confidence observed in all cases. Small cases of medicine, with full directions, sent to any address that may be ordered.

The following are some of the celebrated remedies to be had at the Dispensary, prepared from the recipes of the most celebrated French Physicians, and are warranted to be the most efficacious medicine in use.

RICORD'S ANTI MERCURIAL SYRUP, for all eruptions of the blood, ulcerations of the throat and nose, pains in the bones, diseases arising from a turgidness of mercury, blotches, rashes, pimples, &c. There is no preparation of Sarsaparilla in the world equal to this—price, $1, or 6 bottles for $5, sent to all parts of the Union.

VALPEAUS SPECIFIC MIXTURE, for the immediate and permanent cure of all morbo-purulent contagious discharges from urinary passages; warranted; price $4 per vial, sent to all parts of the Union.

DESLAND'S STRENGTHENING MIXTURE, for the cure of constitutional debility, seminal weakness produced by intemperance, &c. This most excellent medicine stands at the head of all other remedies; price $2 a bottle, or 6 for $10; sent to all parts of the Union. A LUDICROUS MISTAKE. A Cincinnati grocery house, finding out that cranberries commanded six dollars per bushel, and under the impression that the article could be bought to advantage at St. Mary's, wrote out to a customer, acquainting him with the fact and requesting him to send "one hundred bushels per Simmons," (the wagoner usually sent). The correspondent, a plain uneducated man, had considerable difficulty in deciphering the fashionable scrawl common with merchants' clerks of late years, and the most important word, "cranberries," he failed to make out, but he did plainly and clearly read—one hundred bushels per Simmons. As the article was growing all around him, all the boys in the neighborhood were set to gathering it, and the wagoner made his appearance in due time in Cincinnati with eighty bushels, all that the wagon-bed would hold, and a line from the country merchant that the remainder would follow the next trip. An explanation soon ensued but the customer insisted that the Cincinnati house should have written by Simmons and not per Simmons.

UNIVERSAL LANGUAGE. Sam Slick says there are two languages that's universal—the language of love and the language of money; the gals understand the one and the men understand the other, the world over.

The Whig State Convention have nominated Hon. John Young for Governor, and Hon. Hamilton Fish for Lieutenant Governor, of the State of New York.

George T. Bigelow, Esq., has been appointed Commissioner, by the Governor of New Hampshire, to take acknowledgments of deeds, depositions, etc., in this Commonwealth.

By a provision in the Constitution of Mississippi, the introduction of slaves into that State is prohibited after the present year.

C. L. Knapp, a printer, has been nominated by the Liberty Party of Middlesex District, in this State, as a candidate for Congress. May success crown the wishes of his political friends.

The contractors at Portland, for the Atlantic and St. Lawrence railroad, advertise for five hundred laborers, with a prospect of steady work for one or two years, at a dollar per day.

The county of Schuylkill, (Pa.) which a few years ago was a wilderness, now contains forty thousand inhabitants, and thirty million dollars of capital and fifty miles of railroad under ground among the mines.

The last session of Congress cost the country, in round numbers, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The number of Odd Fellows in the British Empire is said to be three hundred thousand.

Fifteen runaway slaves escaped from Hagerstown, (Md.) last week, nine of whom have been arrested.

The funeral of Mr. McConnell took place at Washington, and was attended by the President, the heads of the several Departments, and a large concourse of citizens. He was buried in the Congressional Ground.

A pond of fifty acres in West Springfield, (Mass.) has lately changed from a pure transparency to a dirty yellow color, supposed to have been occasioned by the recent earthquake.

Messrs. Tomkins, Burrell, Osterhout and Knapp, who were convicted in Delaware County, (N. Y.) of Anti-Rent violations of law, and sentenced to the Sing Sing State Prison, have been pardoned by Gov. Wright.

The liberty party of New York at a recent convention, nominated Henry Bradley of Penn Yan for Governor, and William L. Chapin of Albany, for Lieutenant Governor.

The George Washington steamer, now building at New York, to run on the Hudson River, it is said will be "the most superb boat ever built in America." She is three hundred and forty feet long.

The Salem Gazette says, that the drought is unusual in that neighborhood. Swampy land has not been so dry for twenty years.

Gold bullion to the value of half a million of dollars is imported monthly into London from the Russian mines.

The Governor of New York has refused to pardon William Freeman, the negro who murdered several persons in one family at Auburn.

In the late session of Congress, the years and days were called five hundred times. This is equal to about three hundred hours, or sixty working days to Congress, and at eight dollars per day for two hundred and twenty-four members of the House, the expense to the nation was over one hundred thousand dollars.

Horses are dying in great numbers at Staten Island, of the "Horse Cholera."

A French Notary has been arrested in New York as a fugitive from justice, and is charged with forging certain bank and commercial papers and deeds to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars.

A negro woman and her children lately taken from Pennsylvania to Virginia by a dealer in human flesh, and claimed by him as property, have been set free by the proper authority.

The stockholders of the Portsmouth Steam Factory have voted to add one hundred and twenty five thousand dollars to their capital stock.

The steamer New York, plying from Mobile, (Mi.) was totally lost in a severe gale on the 7th inst., and seventeen persons drowned.

COURT AT DEDHAM. The present session of the Court of Common Pleas, at Dedham, has been held by Judge Ward. Messrs Albert Thayer and Horatio G. Dearborn were the Jurors from this town. There was quite a large number of witnesses before the Grand Jury, many of whom were summoned to testify for violations of the license law. The proceedings of the Court have not been received, but will be given next week.

WHIG CONVENTIONS. The whig party of Congressional District, No. 8, and of Norfolk County, held conventions, in Dedham, Oct. 1st, for the selection of a candidate for Congress and of three State Senators for the County of Norfolk.

WHIG NOMINATIONS. His Excellency George N. Briggs and His Honor John Reed have each been nominated for re-election to the respective offices they now occupy, by the State Convention held last Wednesday in Boston. The convention was fully attended, and much warmth was manifested in the discussion relative to slavery.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTIONS. The democratic party meet in convention, at Dedham, on the 6th of October, for the selection of a candidate for Representative to Congress from the Eighth District, and also the nomination of three Senatorial candidates for Norfolk County.

ARRIVAL FROM ENGLAND. The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston, on Friday last week.

The session of parliament had been closed. The English Minister resident in this country, has been instructed to make an offer of mediation to both the United States and Mexico.

Business of all kinds is quite lively in England. The money market was easy, and the price of cotton improved. A disease has appeared among the turnips similar to the potato rot.

ODD FELLOWS' CELEBRATION. The dedication of the Odd Fellows' Hall, at Philadelphia, on the 17th inst., was very fully attended by members of the Order, from all sections of the Union, besides being witnessed by a multitude of spectators. An address was delivered by Samuel D. Patterson. In the evening a grand ball was given in the new hall. Late in the evening an entertainment was served up in the upper lodge rooms, to which some five hundred persons sat down. Every thing passed off pleasantly and quietly.

NEW ROUTE BETWEEN BOSTON AND NEW YORK. A large and heavy steamer of fourteen hundred and fifty tons burthen, and three hundred and fifteen feet long, is in the course of completion at New York, which is intended as the pioneer of a new line about to be established to run from that city to Fall River, and from thence to Boston by railroad. It is presumed this line is in connection with the Old Colony Railroad.

WEEKLY SYMBOL. Bros. Durivage and Prince's last number of the Symbol, which we received, was in part only readable. This we regret on account of the notice of the celebration at Philadelphia. Send another number for L. and F.

FATAL ACCIDENT. An Irishman, employed on the Old Colony Railroad, was killed on Tuesday morning last, near Weymouth, by falling from a dirt car, which passed over his body, mangle him most shockingly.

TERRIBLE STORM. The papers give accounts of a most disastrous gale on the Southern coast. A letter written from Old Point Comfort, (Va.) dated 15th inst., states that "it is impossible to form any idea or estimate of the immense loss of life and property."

"DENISON'S BEST BOWER." We have received the prospectus of a semi-monthly newspaper with this title, to be issued at Boston, at one dollar per annum. Rev. Charles W. Denison, Editor and Proprietor. It is to be independent in politics and religion,—to be devoted to the cause of seamen—the temperance reform—to virtue, science, agriculture, general intelligence, and whatever else the Editor thinks proper. Mr. Denison has had considerable experience in conducting a public journal, more especially one devoted to seamen, and the "Best Bower" will undoubtedly be an able and useful paper. Subscriptions received at this office.

NEW EATING HOUSE. Spacious and well arranged eating rooms have recently been opened at No. 9, Lindall Street, Boston, by Oliver B. Ford, who is behind none of the Fords in his line of business. All who are accustomed to patronize such establishments, can here have their meals served up at all hours of the day in the neatest and most expeditious manner, and of the best in the market.

FARMER'S ALMANAC FOR 1847. This calendar, acknowledged on all hands to be the best since the days of "Poor Richard," has made its fifty fifth annual appearance, containing, as usual, a great variety of "new, useful and entertaining matter." It announces the death of its venerable editor, Robert B. Thomas, Esq., in May last, aged eighty, but we are pleased to learn that the Almanac will be issued annually as heretofore, arrangements having been made previous to his death and matter for succeeding numbers furnished the publishers, Jenks & Palmer, Boston, Publishers. Sold by traders and Booksellers generally.

"PUBLIC INVITATION." We would invite the attention of readers to the advertisement of Geo. W. Warren & Co., in another column. They offer their customers extra inducements in the way of prices and goods.

THE FOUNTAIN MINSTREL. This is the title of a little work,—a collection of songs for temperance meetings and pic-nics,—by our friend F. M. Adlington of Weymouth. Our readers are somewhat acquainted with the author of these songs, through the columns of the Patriot, and it is not necessary for us to say one word in commendation of his talents. We hope his little "Minstrel" will be justly appreciated by the temperance community, and our friend receive something more tangible for the efforts of his muse, than tailors and printers generally get for improving the habits of mankind.

ROBBING A CHURCH. The Catholic Church in this town was entered, on Saturday night last, through a back window, and a silver chalice, two candlesticks and a plate stolen. These articles were offered for sale in Boston, by a man and woman named William and Margaret Davidson, and suspicion being excited, the facts were made known to Constable Coolidge, who immediately arrested the Davidsons, and afterwards ascertained where the articles belonged. They were bound over to the Municipal Court in October.

FASHIONABLE CLOTHING. All who are in want of a genteel fit out in the way of clothing should notice the advertisement of Mr. Dinegan, Merchant Tailor, who offers a great assortment of rich goods. A good fit is warranted, too, so no one need fear to give him a trial.

MEXICO. The proposal from the United States for an honorable peace, has been rejected by Mexico unless our army and navy are first withdrawn from her territory. This our government decline to do, and the offer of mediation by England has also been declined. Measures are being taken to prosecute the war with vigor.

Niblo's famous and extensive place of resort for amusement and recreation in the city of New York, has been destroyed by fire.

The second brigade of Massachusetts militia will muster near the railroad station at Centre Abington, on Thursday, the first of October.

DANIEL BAXTER, JOSEPH W. ROBERTSON, BRYANT B. NEWCOMB.

Dr. Jayne's Expectorant.

This invaluable medicine is daily effecting some of the most astonishing and wonderful cures that have ever been known. All who have used it for Asthma, Coughs, Spitting of Blood, Hooping Cough, Croup or Hives, Consumption, Chronic Pleurisy, Hoarseness, Pain and Soreness of the Breast, Difficulty of Breathing, and every other disease of the Lungs and Breast, can do attest its usefulness—BRONCHITIS, a disease which is annually sweeping thousands to a premature grave, under the mistaken name of Consumption, is always cured by it. The usual symptoms of this disease (Bronchitis) are Cough, Soreness of the Lungs or Throat, Hoarseness, Difficulty of Breathing, Asthma, Hectic Fever, a spitting up of phlegm or matter, and sometimes blood. It is an inflammation of the fine skin which lines the inside of the whole of the wind pipe or six vessels, which run through every part of the Lungs. This Expectorant immediately suppresses the Cough and Pain, subdues the Inflammation and Fever, removes the difficulty of breathing, by producing a free and easy expectoration, so that a cure is soon effected.

Dr. Wood's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Bitters. This celebrated compound, so salutary in its effects in all cases when administered for Dyspepsia, Piles, Indigestion, Hereditary Humors and Impurities of the Blood, that many of the most distinguished citizens have approved and recommended it, and openly acknowledged it the most valuable medicine ever discovered. It is truly a valuable medicine, and is effecting an immense amount of good in the relief of suffering humanity.

Dr. W. H. Milnor, N. Y., testifies that many persons have been benefited by the use of the Bitters, and in every case they have given the most perfect satisfaction. Sold by CLAPP & RICHARDS.

CAUTION. In setting forth the virtues of Dr. Wistar's Balsam, we have no desire to deceive those who are laboring under affliction, nor do we wish to eulogize it more than it deserves. Yet when we look and see the vast amount of suffering and distress occasioned by many of the diseases in which this medicine has proved so highly successful, we feel that we cannot urge its claims too strongly, or say too much in its favor.

Let the public be on their guard. Other "Balsams" and mixtures are sometimes imposed on the unsuspecting for the genuine Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. Some for the purpose of succeeding better in their schemes, have used a part of the name of the genuine, as "Phoenix Balsam of Wild Cherry," "Balsam of Wild Cherry, Confection, &c.," "Syrup of Wild Cherry."

None genuine without the written signature of I. Butts. For sale in Boston by S. W. Fowle, 138 Wash. St. Quincy, by Mrs. E. HAYDEN. Sept. 26. 1w

The news of the battle of the 8th January 1815, was carried from New Orleans to Washington in twenty-five days. The intelligence of Taylor's victories on the Rio Grande, reached Washington in seven days from that place.

Arrival of Fall and Winter Goods.

JOHN DINEGAN, MERCHANT TAILOR, School Street, Quincy, HAS the pleasure to announce the arrival of an IMMENSE and VARIED ASSORTMENT of very heavy BROADCLOTHS, of English, French and German Manufacture, that will be suitable for OVERCOATS, FROCKS OR SACKS, which he will sell either by the piece or yard, or MAKE INTO GARMENTS at prices Considerably Less than he has ever offered to his customers before. Those in want of CLOTHING, at FAIR PRICES, would do well to give him an early call, as the various and SUPERIOR character of his present assortment offers peculiar advantages for judicious selection. He would therefore call the attention of the public to the following list of prices:

For an Overcoat of extra heavy English, French or German Beaver, well lined and wadded throughout,

Do. double weaved and faced with Silk Velvet, $12.00

Do. made of any color or style that may be desired, 18.00 to 24.00

Frock Coats or loose Sacks will vary from, 4.00 to 10.00

In fact, he can get up as good a suit of Clothes for eighteen dollars as his neighbors in the city charge for twenty to twenty-five dollars for.

VESTINGS.

His Assortment of Vestings must be seen to be appreciated. It consists of VELVETS, Plain and Figured: SATINS; CASHMERE'S of every style and pattern, and in variety of VALENCIANS.

He has also received a good assortment of SATINETTS that will be sold, or made to order, on the most reasonable terms. He has a first rate article, Double Milled, at 37 1-2 cents the yard, that will do for Men's or Boys' COATS or PANTS.

To the Public.

Sanctioned by public approbation after a trial of years, and encouraged during that time with steady, progressive and increasing trade, satisfactorily testifies that I have merited success. The increase of business and the position I occupy is not the result of sudden caprice but of steady advancement.

My Goods are all marked at the VERY LOWEST notch, and there shall be no deviation from them, as I have but ONE PRICE.

I shall continue to have my Garments made by the best of Journeymen Tailors, therefore I shall be able to let my customers have their Garments made in a style that will bear a comparison with those made in the most celebrated establishments in the city, and nearly one half cheaper, as all my garments are cut by myself; they are therefore Warranted to fit and give perfect satisfaction.

Trimnings of every description, very cheap.

JOHN DINEGAN, MERCHANT TAILOR, School Street, Quincy.

September 26.

Dr. Wood's SARSAPARILLA and WILD CHERRY BITTERS.

For the Permanent Removal of all such diseases as take their rise in an Impure Blood, Impaired Digestion, morbid state of the Liver and Stomach, Weakness of the Nervous System, and a disordered habit of Constitution generally.

DR. WOOD'S Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Bitters have already, by their substantial excellence, won a degree of public favor and patronage, which puts them beyond the need of recommendation. Being faithfully prepared of the most excellent materials, they can be fully confided in by all in need of a tonic, aperient or alterative remedy. Sarsaparilla takes a high rank among Physicians and all others in the list of curative agents, and it is this fact which has rendered it so deservedly popular over all other medicines of the kind.

In Dr. Wood's Sarsaparilla, the most standard preparation, it is warranted to be found in great purity and strength, and gaining much by its union with the Wild Cherry, a tonic of the first order. This happy combination is the only one ever made of these articles, and founded as it is on the best medical principles, and their virtues extracted by a rigid chemical analysis, experience has shown its unusual power and efficacy.

This preparation will be found on trial, to be a sure and speedy remedy for the diseases enumerated above. They purify the blood, secure regular digestion, promote a healthy action of the Liver and Stomach, and strengthen the nerves, at once securing HEALTH and VIGOR to the whole system. In all cases of DESPONDENCY, arising from Indigestion or Nervous Irritation, they have been used with remarkable success; nor are they less useful as a remedy for Headache, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, and a general prostration of the system. At the same time, it must be stated, that they are neither violent nor at all dangerous in their operation, securing as they do the desired end by a steady, regular and easy influence. Taken daily, in doses prescribed, they will be found to operate in that gentle and salutary manner, which is, in fact, their highest recommendation.

The following certificates, among many others which have been received from the most respectable sources, furnish satisfactory proof of the value and efficacy of this highly popular medicine.

Sandwich, Sept. 4, 1841.

MR. E. THORNTON, JR.

Dear Sir,—This I certify, that my daughter has been troubled with Dyspepsia for a number of years, attended with almost constant headache and other distressing symptoms which accompany this disease. She visited Boston to avail herself of the advice of the justly celebrated physicians of that city, in no purpose. By the solicitation of a friend, I was induced to purchase a bottle of Dr. Wood's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Bitters. Before taking one bottle she was relieved entirely of the headache, and after taking two or three bottles, the other symptoms entirely disappeared.

N. B. GIBBS,

North Fairhaven, Long Plain, June, 16, 1845.

MR. E. THORNTON, JR.

Dear Sir,—My daughter has been for more than two years afflicted with a confirmed Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, together with a severe and constant headache. During this time, she was constantly attended by the most skillful and intelligent physicians, but with little or no relief, until we found the disease was rapidly taking the form of confirmed consumption. At this time, I determined to have recourse to Dr. Wood's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Bitters, as prepared by you, and it gives me the sincerest pleasure to state, that after the use of a few bottles, my daughter was happily restored to perfect health. I have the highest confidence in this medicine, and shall cheerfully recommend it to my friends.

Very truly yours, ANSEL WHITE.

The cure described in the above certificate of Mr. White, is by no means a singular one. There are hundreds who have been cured from the most acute or long continued disease, by the use of this excellent and highly popular remedy. The proprietor recommends it to the public with the utmost confidence, for in all cases where it has had a fair trial, it has succeeded beyond the expectations of the patient or even his own. The care with which it is prepared, and the intrinsic excellence of its materials, should secure, and have secured for it, a character which it well deserves. The prejudice usually existing against advertised medicines, would not be merited if bestowed on this. The wonderful cures it has performed, and the acknowledged celebrity of its principal constituents, should at once recommend it to the public favor.

Manufactured and sold by E. THORNTON, JR., Chemist and Druggist, 10 N. Water street, New Bedford, where all orders may be directed.

POETRY.

ABEL ENTERING HEAVEN.

Ten thousand times ten thousand sung
Loud anthems round the throne,
When lo! one solitary tongue
Began a song unknown!
A song unknown to angel ears,
A song that told of banished fears,
Of pardoned sins, and dried up tears.

Not one of all the heavenly host
Could these high notes attain!
But spirits from a distant coast
United in the strain;
Till he who first began the song,
To sing alone not suffered long,
Was mingled with a countless throng.

And still as hours are fleeting by,
The angels ever bear
Some newly ransomed soul on high,
To join the chorus there;
And so the song will louder grow,
Till all redeemed by Christ below
To that fair world of rapture go.

O give me, Lord, my golden harp,
And tune my broken voice;
That I may sing of troubles sharp
Exchanged for endless joys;
The song that ne'er was heard before,
A sinner reached the heavenly shore,
But now shall sound forevermore.

HEART WISHES.

I would not wear a golden crown,
Nor reign upon a throne,
But e'er one true and loving heart
I would be queen alone.

I would not have a servile throng
Press round to bow the knee,
But one light, free and eager step,
Haste homeward unto me.

I would not hear the stirring shout
Of plaudits far and wide,
But list a soft voice gently speak
My name at eventide.

I would not have a sumptuous couch,
When pain had laid me low,
But one dear arm to fold my form,
One hand to press my brow.

I would not have proud marble piled
Upon my lowly head,
But simple stone, and grassy mound,
And one to weep me dead.

I would not have the breath of fame
Attempt my worth to prove,
But I would have one heart keep
The memory of my love.

I would, beloved, to thee and me,
The priceless pearl be given,
That thy true heart may meet mine own,
And each love in heaven.

APPEARANCES ARE DECEITFUL.

"Thou hast suffered all that woman's heart
May bear, but must not tell."—Mrs. Romans.
She is not happy, though her life
Is wreathed with radiant smiles—
Though every word she utters,
To mortal thoughts beguiles.

She is not happy though her brow
Looks out so calmly fair,
And every feature symbolize
A heart unknown to care.

She is not happy, though the truth
She will to none reveal;
But oh! there is no grief like that,
Which we from all conceal!

The world sees but the outward scenes,
Where each may act their part;
But oh! what desolating wrecks,
May hide within the heart.

They tell us when we enter life,
That vain are hopes of youth;
And soon, alas! experience
Convinces of the truth.

And many a brilliant eye is lit
With fever's fitful glare;
And many a glowing form within,
A wasting heart doth wear.

ANECDOTES.

Farmer Dickens, alike noted for his shrewdness and pretty girls, was visited by Jo Jenkins, under pretence of trading oxen, while his real object was to secure one of Farmer Dickens' daughters. Finding no way to accomplish his real object without a direct appeal to the old man, he ventured to pop the question, and received in return a most decided negative. Jo was not shrewd enough to manage for his girls. Jo, nothing daunted, pushed the trade in oxen, and spite of the farmer's shrewdness, succeeded in a bargain by which the old man found himself essentially "shaved." At the next appearance of Jo at Farmer Dickens' all was changed, and the old man at once declared that he might go ahead, for if he was shrewd enough to cheat him, he could risk him with his girls. Jo went ahead, took possession of the desired object, and thus far has shown that the old man was not in error as to his conclusion.

A young and pretty girl stepped into a shop where a spruce young man, who had long been enamored but dared not speak, stood behind the counter selling dry goods. In order to remain as long as possible, she cheapened everything, at last, she said, "I believe you think I am cheating you."
"Oh, no," said the younger, "to me you are always fair."
"Well," whispered the lady, blushing as she laid an emphasis on the word, "I would not stay so long bargaining, if you are not so dear."

Theodore Hook used to call macaroni "tobacco pipes made easy,"—scalloped oysters were "children's care done in saw dust."

which they will make up into Garments to suit purchases at such prices as cannot fail to procure a return of patronage.

All of these goods having been bought the present season for cash, at the first market after importation, the public may rest assured that we can and will sell so as to defy competition.

Mr. JOHN RUSSELL, who superintends the Cutting and Making up of Garments, having had upwards of ten years PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE OF CUTTING, at the first Schools of Europe and America, gives him a decided advantage over any Tailor in this vicinity in producing any style of Garments that the world of fashion can suggest.

His system of Cutting being different from any used by country tailors, enables him to give an easy and graceful setting garment to the most imperfect form.

Those who have tested his ability can bear witness to the fact. From those unacquainted a trial is all that is necessary.

N. B. Where the cloth is furnished by the customer the trimming and making will be done equally as well as though purchased at the establishment.

DR. FERNANDS' Vegetable Indian Arcanum,

FOR THE CURE OF Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or pustules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impudence in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an impure use of Mercury. The complexion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernands, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernands, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernands himself; consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions, or even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the incredulous invalid that no more has been said in its favor than its virtues safely warrant. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine.

To prevent imposition, each bottle of directions accompanying the medicine will be signed by J. K. Fernands, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States.

J. K. FERNANDS, Indian Physician
JOS. J. CLARK, Agent for New England States.

CERTIFICATES.

From W. Abercrombie of Quincy, Merchant Trader.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernands' Medicine:

SIR—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Inflammation of the Lungs, and Disease of the Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast entailing upon me the worst of all human diseases to which mortals are heir to—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines which were recommended, but from all of them I obtained not the least relief. About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.

WYMAN ABERCROMBIE.
Quincy, April 23, 1843.

From Ibrahim Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy Stone Bank.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark:

DEAR SIR—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum.

I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that he is a gentleman of high standing, and has been on the decline—that he has had frequent turns of raising blood, to such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed convincing evidence that his health has been restored, and I have it from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernands' Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great flatulency, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, etc.

I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,
IBRAHIM BARTLETT.

Highly Important to Invalids. SALUTARY CAUTION TO THOSE SEEKING MEDICAL AID.

THE HUNTERIAN DISPENSARY, established for the suppression of Quackery, and for the sale of genuine Medicines, offer their assistance and counsel to the sick and afflicted, knowing from experience and unequivocal knowledge, that hundreds annually find a premature grave from the malpractices of unlettered and unlicensed practitioners. The records of our Hospitals are a sad proof of the above. Dishonesty and the speculation of Quacks, which continually make the most sacred science subservient to their purposes, have availed themselves of every expedient, like every other road to deception; but if there be men who are depraved and reckless, there are some too whose actions are guided by the interest of their patients alone, and whom no imputation can affect.

The limits of an advertisement can hardly do justice to our subject, for it is an important one. When Celsus treats of the diseases of the sexual system, before entering upon the subject he apologizes for the indecency of his subject, as if a Medical man could be reproached for soothing suffering humanity; as well might it be said to Massagni, that there

MISCELLANY.

A NIGHT AMONG WOLVES.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

'Twas a night of January 17.—We had been to a fine quilting frolic, about two miles from our settlement of four or five log houses. 'Twas rather late, about twelve o'clock, I should guess—when the party broke up. There was a moon—and a dull overhead sky and a few pale and sickly looking stars gave us their dull light as they shone through the dingy curtain. There were six of us in company; Henry Mason and four as pretty girls as ever grew up this side of the Green Mountains. These were my two sisters, and Harry's sister and his sweetheart, the daughter of our next door neighbor. She was a downright handsome girl—that Caroline Allen. I never saw her equal, though I am no stranger to pretty faces. She was so pleasant and kind of heart; so gentle and sweet spoken, and so intelligent besides that every body loved her, and she had an eye as blue as the hill violet, and her lips were like a red rose leaf in June. No wonder, then, that Harry Mason loved her—boy though he was—for we had neither of us seen our seventeenth summer.

Our path lay through a thick forest of oak, with here and there a tall pine raising its full dark shadow against the sky, with an outline rendered distinct by the darkness. The snow was deep—deeper a great deal than it has felt of late years; but the surface was frozen strong to bear our weight and we hurried on over the bright pathway with rapid steps. We had not proceeded far before a long, low howl came to our ears. We all knew it in a moment; and I could feel a shudder thrilling the arms that were close to my own, as a sudden cry burst from the lips of all of us—the wolves! the wolves!

Did you ever see a wild wolf—not one of your caged, broken down show animals which are exhibited for a sixpence a sight and children half price; but a fierce half starved ranger of the wintry forest, howling over the barren snow, actually mad with hunger? There is not one of God's creatures which has got such a fiendish look as this animal. It has the form as well as the spirit of a demon.

Another and another howl; and then we could hear distinctly the quick patter of feet behind us. We all turned right about and looked in the direction of the sound. 'The devils are after us,' said Mason, pointing to a line of dark gliding bodies. And so in fact they were—a whole troop of them—howling like so many Indians in a pow-wow. We had no weapons of any kind; and we knew enough of the nature of the vile creatures who followed us to know it would be useless to contend with them. There was not a moment to lose; the savage beasts were close upon us. To attempt flight would have been a hopeless affair. There was but one chance of escape, and we instantly seized upon it.

'To the tree! let us climb this tree!' I cried springing forward to a low boughed and gnarled oak; which I saw at a glance might be easily climbed into.

Harry Mason sprang lightly into the tree and aided in placing the terrified girls in a place of comparative security among the thick boughs. I was the last on the ground and the whole troop were yelling at my heels before I reached the rest of the company. There was one moment of hard breathing and wild exclamations among us and then a feeling of calm thankfulness for our escape. The night was cold and we soon began to shiver and shake like so many sailors on the top of an Iceland whaler. But there was no murmurs—no complaining among us, for we could distinctly see the gaunt, attenuated bodies of the wolves beneath us, and every now and then we could see great, glowing eyes, staring up at the trees where we were seated. And then their yells—they were loud, long and devilish. I know not how long we remained in this situation, for we had no means of ascertaining the time—when I heard a limb of a tree cracking, as if breaking down beneath the weight of some of us; and in a moment afterwards a shriek went through my ears like the piercing of a knife. A light form went down through the naked branches, and fell with a dull and heavy sound upon the stiff snow.

'Oh, God! I am gone!' It was the voice of Caroline Allen. The poor girl never spoke again! There was a horrid dizziness and confusion in my brain. I spoke not, for the whole of that time was like an ugly, unreal dream. I only remember that there were smothered groans and dreadful howls underneath! It was over in a moment. Poor Caroline!—She was literally eaten alive. The wolves had a frightful feast, and they became raving mad at the taste of blood.

When I came to myself—when the horrible dream went off—and it lasted but a moment—I struggled to shake off the arms of my sister which were clinging around me, and could I have cleared myself, I should have jumped down among the raving animals. But when a second thought came over me, my attempt to rescue would be useless. As for poor Mason he was wild with horror. He had tried to follow Caroline when she fell, but he could not shake off the grasp of his terrified sister. His youth, and his weak constitution and frame, were unable to withstand the dreadful trial; and he stood close by my side, with his hands firmly clinched, and his teeth set closely, gazing on the wrangling creatures below, with the fixed glare of a maniac. It was indeed a terrible scene. Around was the thick cold night—and below the ravenous wild beast were lapping their bloody jaws, and howling for another victim.

The morning broke at last, and our frightful enemies fled at the first advance of daylight like so many cowardly murderers. We waited until the sun had risen before we ventured to crawl from our hiding place. We were chilled through—every limb was numb and cold with terror—and poor Mason was delirious, and raged wildly about the things he had witnessed.

We had not gone but a little distance when we were met by our friends from the settlement, who had become alarmed at our absence. They were shocked at our wild and frightful appearance. They assisted us to reach home; but Harry Mason never recovered from this dreadful trial. He neglected his business, his studies and his friends, anon murmuring to himself about that horrible night. He fell to drinking soon after, and died a miserable drunkard, before age had whitened a single hair of his head.

For my part I confess I have never recovered from the terrors of the melancholy circumstance which I have endeavored to describe. The thought of it has haunted me like a shadow; and even now, the whole scene comes at times freshly before me in my dreams, and I start up with something of the feeling of terror which I experienced when more than half a century ago, I passed a night among the wolves.

THE FORCE OF CONSCIENCE.

Fernando was late one night returning from his store, where the urgency of business had detained him, and after settling his accounts to his entire satisfaction, was bending his way to an interesting family consisting of a young and beautiful wife, a lovely babe, and an aged and infirm mother whom he protected with that filial care which is the indispensable duty of every child.

Whilst pursuing his way through one of the principal streets in Seville, absorbed in happy thoughts at the apparent prosperous state of his affairs, his meditations were interrupted by the cry of 'help, help'; possessing a brave, undaunted spirit, and always ready to fly at the cry of distress, he flew to their relief. The voice was from a dark and unfrequented avenue, but, by the light of a flickering lamp, he discovered a man upon the ground reeking in his blood. He wished to assist him, but the vital spark had fled forever.

He drew the dagger from the victim's breast and endeavored to find out the assassin; but whilst engaged in this, the patrol passed that way, and perceiving persons there, immediately seized Fernando and procured a light, discovered the deadly weapon in his hand, and his clothes bloody. They conducted him to prison notwithstanding his earnest entreaties and solicitations that he might first acquaint his wife of the circumstances.

His wife was unconscious of what had passed; she sat anxiously expecting her husband. The tedious moments chased one another by. The clock tolled one, there was naught to cheer her gloomy hours; she walked the room to and fro with a heavy heart, and a dejected countenance. The candle denoted the lateness of the hour; the family had all retired; often did she go to the door, in hopes of seeing him. But all was silent—Fernando's well known step broke not upon her ear—she closed the door; she sat pensively before the fire, mournfully watching the dying embers.

With a trembling step she retired to her chamber; her babe was in a sweet slumber; its heavenly features filled her soul, and reminded her of her Fernando. She flew to it, and imprinted a kiss upon its rosy cheek; 'O! Fernando,' she passionately exclaimed, 'where art thou, why dost thou grieve me so; why forget thy affectionate wife and child?' She sank upon the bed and being overcome with grief, fell into a confused sleep.

The next day Fernando was dragged before the court, when his examination immediately took place; he spoke in his own defence but it was of no avail; for his bloody clothes, the weapon found upon him, and the unfrequented avenue where the murder was committed, were sufficient indications of his guilt. Sentence of death was pronounced upon him. Fernando rose and thus addressed them:

'Sirs, I am arraigned before this tribunal, charged with the heinous crime of murder—the name of which is horrid to a man of honor—what must it be to the wife of the accused—who can describe her feelings and her agony, when she beholds the partner of her life, an innocent husband, about to suffer death and for the crime of another? Who shall attempt to depict the sensations of an aged mother, whose silvery locks command attention and respect; the happiness of the evening of her days will be blasted, and the remnant of her life filled with sorrow and despair? A tender infant, too, whose father is snatched away, and leaves it an unprotected orphan. But my sentence is pronounced, my tender wife, my child and widowed mother, strike like daggers to my soul. Forgive, sirs, this short appeal, and receive my kindest blessings.'

He was conveyed to execution; his manly step and graceful form drew the admiration of all. There was a calm serenity dwelling on his countenance; a look of resignation beamed from his noble features, as he gazed upon those who had come to witness his end. He arrived at the spot not a whisper was heard; his hands were clasped in silent prayer—suddenly a female's voice sounded through the air—'Where is he, where is Fernando, my husband, the protector of my child?' She flew by the guards, and in an instant was at Fernando's feet. Heavens! what a sight—tears started from every eye. The voice of pity was heard aloud; Fernando gazed in agony upon his wife and child. 'They shall not kill thee; oh! spare my husband, spare the father of my child; see it smiles unconscious of its father's danger; who is as innocent as it is; oh! mercy intercede, and protect, protect my husband!' she fell backwards, her eyes were fixed toward heaven. Fernando snatched a parting kiss and ascended to the scaffold and bared his neck to the executioner. 'Heavens!' he exclaimed, 'receive my wife and child under thy kind protection, guard them with a watchful eye, and when I'm laid within the narrow tomb, prove to the world my innocence.' The signal was given, he laid his head upon the block, the axe was raised—'Hold, hold!' exclaimed a sun-burnt Spaniard, 'by Heaven he shall not die; he is innocent; I am the murderer; my conscience will not suffer Fernando to perish to leave his wife a widow and his child an orphan. I have no friend, no wife, no child, or aged mother to mourn for me. My conscience will not let an innocent man suffer for my crimes. Justice shall be done.' Fernando was restored to his family, and that character of his which always shone unsullied, now burst through a brighter light, and his innocence was proved to the world.

MY WIFE-IN-LAW.

'Going the wrong way John,' cried a young mechanic to his friend, as he met him in the street.

'Got hungry,' rejoined the other. Going to the tavern to get some breakfast.'

'Has your wife gone away?'

'No! but she don't know how to cook. Yesterday she boiled the lettuce and radish, and dished the turnips raw. This morning the eggs were cooked as hard as bullets. If they would go into my two barrelled gun, I could shoot crows with them. And ever since I was married I have lain under the interdict of the children of Israel in the wilderness. I have had no leavened bread.'

'Well John, I am in the same predicament. Lucy don't know how to cook, so I cried it yesterday, but had no luck; and she says she'll try to learn, and I shall send her forthwith one quarter to school to my mother, for I verily believe that half I carry into the house is wasted.'

'If your wife is willing to learn you'll do well enough and are a happy man. You have a wife whereas I've only a wife-in-law, for a woman who takes no interest in her husband's welfare is not a wife indeed, or a wife in need. She is only a wife-in-law. Emma isn't willing to learn to cook or mend either. She says her mother told her it was quite vulgar now-a-days to know anything about domestic concerns, especially for a young wife. That the latest fashion is for wives to be ladies, and have their servants. That she must tell John she was not made to be a drudge, and he must not be so selfish as to want her to work. Fine times these, George. A man that don't stand ready to support his wife, two or three attendants and much company in extravagance, is directly a niggard. Don't know what will be done. Men can't all be thriving business men and become independent at once; we must have some laborers, and they, poor men, must take vows of perpetual celibacy, for aught I see, like the Catholic priests. I had a pretty little place when I was married, but it's mortgaged now, and I must not open my mouth to say a word. If I do, I am a niggard, and want a wife on purpose to do my drudgery.'

I wept at my birth and every day shows why.

SUNDAY EVENING IN NEW YORK.

We sometimes wish that good old Diedrich Knickerbocker could drop quietly in upon New York some warm Sunday evening and scan with cool, calm eyes the motley tide of humanity that ever ebbs and flows through its well worn channels. As soon as night falls, the humble carnival, begins, as gay if not as gorgeous as Rome. All classes of our population except the unmitigated exclusive and aristocratic, are abroad; and but that the night softens down the highest colors and most piquant contrasts, modifies the cloud like flounders and benevolently fills out the diminutive outline of a Bowery bonnet, some strange freaks of millinery would be perceptible here. The flowered vests and flashy cravats of the gentlemen, too, would be eminently worthy of remark—as is the unendurable flavor of their strong segars. But all seem to be entirely happy, and life appears rolling joyously along like a bright, swift stream that reflects only the clear sky and the flowery banks beneath which it rushes. Here are long files of lovers in couples, pacing slowly and confidentially, arms linked together and lips discussing the tenderest themes—for what solitude can be more secure than the everlasting buzz and bustle of Broadway? There go a knot of jolly apprentices who have been 'coming it a little grand' in Taylor's or Thompson & Weller's, and feel as if they were all over gentlemen.

Here staggers and mutters a poor fellow, stumbling crosswise among the crowd, smashing bonnets and corns at every lurch. Notwithstanding our anti-grog-on-Sunday law and the strictness and impartiality with which it is notoriously enforced, he has managed to find a three-center too much, somewhere, and is beating his way, although he does not know it, to the tombs. Here go a well-dressed, comfortable-looking family of colored people, minding their own business, disturbed by no one and evidently enjoying themselves heartily. There flaunt along a couple of magnificently yet immodestly-dressed women—once beautiful as angels, now their hollow eyes gleaming with the fires of hell. Here is a country cousin come to town to spend Sunday, and who goes blushing and blundering along, right in the face and eyes of the crowd, with a 'gal' buried in flounces and ribbon-banners hanging on either half-relaxed arm, which he has not the courage either to let fall or bend to a square hold-on-able angle. The Alhambra swarms, every ice-creamery is crowded, and thousands pour down towards the Battery for an inspiration from the fresh, salt sea (for your hard-working people are your true practical poets) and a look of childish delight at the mysterious panorama stretching out over the beautiful bay. From the recesses of the castle soft strains of sacred melody are stealing, mingled with the grateful murmur of the little playful fountain over which they are wafted. On the benches, loafers are reposing in blissful forgetfulness, and above them the dark green branches re-echo the shrill yet plaintive cry of the monotonous katydid. So falls the curtain, and we seek repose.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE BOWIE KNIFE.

This instrument was devised by Col. James Bowie, an American, and a man of desperate valor. He considered, and apparently with justice, too, that, in close fighting, a much shorter weapon than the sword ordinarily in use, but still heavy enough to give it sufficient force, and, at the same time, contrive to cut and thrust, would be far preferable, and more advantageous to the wearer. He accordingly invented the short sword, or knife, which has since gone under his name. It is made of various sizes; but the best, I may say, is about the length of a carving knife—case perfectly straight in the first instance, but greatly rounded at the end on the edge side; the upper edge at the end, for the length of about two inches, is ground into the small segment of a circle and rendered sharp; thus leaving an apparent curve of the knife, although in reality the upturned point is not higher than the line of the back. The back itself gradually increases in weight of metal as it approaches the hilt, on which a small guard is placed. The Bowie knife, therefore, has a curved, keen point; is double edged for the space of about a couple of inches of its length; and when in use, falls with the weight of a bill hook. Bowie went to Texas during the troubles which preceded the independence of that country,—and was lying sick in bed at the fortress of Alamo, when, on the 6th of March, 1836, it was stormed by Santa Anna and taken. Bowie was murdered there upon his pillow. The hand that formed the dreadful knife could no longer wield it.—Scientific American.

BORROWING BABIES. All owners of interesting children may be amused by the following, from the Boston Daily American. A gentleman and lady of that city were blessed with a beautiful child of about a year old, which attracted so much attention from the neighbors, that the young ladies opposite frequently scud over to 'borrow the baby.' After being obliged to send for the baby several times, Mr. —, on coming home to dinner, got out of temper, on finding it gone, as usual. 'Here, Jane,' said he, 'go over to Miss —, and get the baby; give them my compliments, and tell them I wish they'd get a baby of their own, and not be obliged to borrow!'

If you lie upon roses when young, you'll lie upon thorns when old.

EDUCATION.

The word education is derived from the Latin, E meaning from out of, and Duco to lead or bring forth; or the bringing forth by discipline the physical, moral and intellectual qualities of the human being. There is a striking analogy between education and cultivation of the soil. To carry the metaphor still further, we may suppose a person to have received the highest gifts of nature, and the greatest improvement from education, that such a person would appear in an erect and dignified form, habituated to strong, pleasing and graceful action; that he would use rightly for himself, his associates and the community, a discriminating sense of right and wrong; that he would secure to himself respect, esteem and confidence by the exercise of intellectual power. If such a person were habitually governed by a sense of gratitude for the benefit of existence and of accountability for the use of talents entrusted to him, there would not be anything to add to his worth. To this standard all men cannot attain, but all men may make some approaches towards it, and every man is bound to exert himself to this end, in proportion to the gifts of nature and of his opportunities to improve them. Since man's accountability, his happiness, prosperity and his all is dependent, in a great measure, on education, how important then that the public mind should be aroused from that long sleep of mental darkness, and burst the last link of that chain which has so long bound them down in thralldom, and rebound from the crush of her long depression and take her stand on the broad and sublime platform of range of thought, reason and education; reassert the dignity of her own nature and take her mighty and majestic course along the great ocean of being, religious liberty, civil liberty, the diffusion of science, the equity of laws, and the amelioration of the condition of the miserable,—all proclaim her bright and rapid progress to the uncreated day of splendor which is fast approaching by the rising sun of education.

I was somewhat surprised on learning the state of education in this place, as I had got the impression abroad, that Quincy was the foremost in the ranks of any town in the State in furnishing statesmen and in education. Although there are common schools which are in as flourishing condition as any in the State, and perhaps more so, yet something more than common is needed, as this is an age of improvement in which every thing has to exert itself to its utmost ability to keep pace with the times. So it must be with education; and as the town has the greatest means of placing herself in the front ranks of learning of any town in the State, it becomes a duty of the most momentous importance, devolving on her, to improve the present. As there has been a lot of land presented to the town, and as pleasant a location as the town affords, for the purpose of erecting a free institution where all the higher branches of education are taught, and, as I understand, Hon. Ex-President Adams is anxious that this should be commenced immediately and is willing to lend a helping hand, and others are willing to lend a helping hand also, all that is wanting is action on the part of those whose duty it is to call a meeting and choose a committee to arrange matters for the speedy erection of this institution. And there is land enough to have one of the handsomest Flora gardens in the State, and the town abounds in ladies who possess the best of taste, who would consider it the greatest pleasure in establishing this garden so as to meet the approbation of every one of refined taste. What cause ever failed that the ladies undertook, especially one of this kind, so emblematic of their nature. I leave the subject for those more able to do it justice. STRANGER.

ERECTITUDE. An erect bodily attitude is of vastly more importance to health than people generally imagine. Crooked bodily positions maintained for any length of time, are always injurious, whether in the sitting, standing or lying position, whether sleeping or walking. To sit with the body leaning forward on the stomach, or to one side, with the heels elevated to a level with the head, is not only in bad taste but exceedingly detrimental to health. It cramps the stomach, presses the vital organs, interrupts the free motions of the chest, and enfeebles the functions of the abdominal and thoracic organs, and in fact unbalances the whole muscular system. Many children become slightly humpbacked or severely round-shouldered, by sleeping with the head raised on a high pillow. When any person finds it easier to sit or stand, or walk or sleep in a crooked position than a straight one, such person may be sure his muscular system is badly deranged, and the more careful he is to preserve a straight or upright position, and get back to nature again, the better.

LACONIC CORRESPONDENCE. Tallyrand once addressed a letter of condolence to a lady who had lost her husband, in two words, 'Oh, Madame!' In less than a year the lady had married again, and then his letter of congratulation was, 'Ah, Madame!' A Quaker at Liverpool once sent a letter to a correspondent, asking the news, by a simple note of interrogation, thus, '?' His friend replied in the same vein, '0.'

COLD WATER ARMY PIC NIC.

At one o'clock, 22d Sept., the children were formed into procession in Lyceum Hall by the Chief Marshal, George Newcomb, Esq., and the President of the army, Dea. George Baxter, numbering eighty-four sections, four in each, besides a large number of marshals. A bright lad of ten, bearing a cold water banner, led the procession, followed by the Chief Marshal, Aids, President and other officers of the Army, and the young misses. The Stoughton Juvenile Band, in the centre, acquitted themselves well. Then followed the lads, with a tee-total banner waving in the rear. The procession marched through Granite, School, and Hancock Streets, to Rev. Mr. Allen's Meeting-house. Here, quite a company of gentlemen, ladies and children, with several marshals, fell into the procession, when we marched down Hancock St., through Sea St., up Washington to Hancock St., up the latter a distance and turned about, giving the army a fine view of each other, with their beautiful banners and badges, then to the Town Hall. Quite a company were outside. On entering, we were surprised to see a line of ladies the length of the Hall, who probably had overpersuaded the benevolent sexton and obtained entrance. The Hall and Gallery were soon filled, the body seats occupied by the children.

Cast an eye over this interesting assembly. In the desk were the chief marshal and the president of the army; Rev. Mr. Allen, orthodox; Dr. Clark, episcopal; and Rev. Bernard Carver, catholic, ministers in town. Rev. E. Thompson, well known, and Rev. J. M. Spear, editor of Prisoner's Friend, Boston. Rev. Mr. Davis, universalist, and Rev. Mr. Burrell, Methodist, were obliged to attend funeral; Rev. Mr. Fox, Methodist, was on a journey. Dea. Grant, Mr. J. H. W. Hawkins, Mr. Wilson of Hingham, and several other benevolent looking gentlemen, were there. On the right of the speakers, a scene of young beauty, on the left, a large company of clean, healthy and bright boys—the mothers, fathers and hope of the next generation. In the gallery, were the choir led by Dr. George Newcomb and lady, who discoursed sweet music to the apparent gratification of the audience. The Dr. sung one piece alone which was loudly applauded. Also, the Juvenile Band, twelve in number, some of whom now grown to young men—all music, soul and body. Below, in front of the desk, were six teen of Mrs. L. A. Newcomb's class of juvenile singers, who sung one song and were prepared with others. All the passages accessible were filled with admiring spectators. Three tables, the length of the Hall, bountifully and splendidly furnished, with all that the eye and taste of temperance could desire, voluntarily contributed, were strong evidence of the deep interest felt by the parents in town in the success of the army.

The meeting was called to order by the chief marshal, who introduced the president of the army, both of whom made some remarks. An appropriate prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Allen, and a song was sung by the juvenile choir. The president now introduced Mr. John H. W. Hawkins, once an inebriate, now a reformed, respectable and good looking man. His address was true to nature and reached the heart. His story of a little girl who obtained five hundred names to the temperance pledge in her book, made the eyes of the children sparkle. Another got seven, but two were drunkards, one a blacksmith the other a cooper. The former drove her from his shop several times, but she was determined to go every day till he signed. Finally, her meekness, candor, resolution and perseverance excited his curiosity, and he asked her to come in and why she wanted him to sign the pledge. She told him it would do him good. Her earnest, anxious look and artless simplicity reached his sympathies. He reflected and signed. The little girl ran to the cooper, who she had often visited, and by whom she had been treated more kindly. He gazed at the name of his neighbor with surprise, pondered and signed it, and they became temperance men. The little girl was overjoyed.

Dea. Grant said, twenty years ago a ragged boy was picked up in a street in Boston and put into the Orphan's Asylum. Now that boy is a minister and called on him a few days ago. He said there were fourteen thousand paupers in Massachusetts who were supported by the State, at an expense of three hundred thousand dollars. Were it not for intoxicating liquors there would not probably be more than one quarter the number or expense.

Rev. J. M. Spear told a touching story of a young man who was enticed to drink, etc, which drew tears from many eyes.

Rev. E. Thompson said there were seventy-five rum taverns in Boston and only five temperance hotels.

Now came the mortal combat with the refreshments, which lasted about thirty minutes. After this, a letter from John Quincy Adams was read, and a number of excellent sentiments and amusing toasts were offered, when the meeting was concluded with the best of feeling. In the evening, in Rev. Mr. Allen's Meeting-house, Rev. E. Thompson, poured forth a stream of good sentiment, stories and anecdote peculiar to himself, to quite an audience.

In giving this Pic-nic, much praise is due to the prompt and efficient exertions of the several committees, to the good will of the public towards the army in giving their money and bringing in refreshments, especially to those young ladies who spent several days in soliciting subscriptions, and to the ladies of the committee of arrangements, whose work appeared to me faultless.

ACCIDENT ON THE RAILROAD. A mistake having occurred at the Boston Post Office, by which the New York mail bag for the steamer Cambria was taken for the Sandwich mail and carried to Plymouth, on Thursday, an engine, with an agent from the Boston Post Office, was despatched after it. On the return, the new engine "Quincy," Mr. John S. Pickering engineer, took the bag and the agent at South Braintree and was proceeding to Boston at the rate of thirty miles an hour, and passed this place about half past six o'clock. The draw in the bridge over Neponset river had been removed for the passage of a sloop, and owing to the dimness of the signal lanterns they were not seen by the engineer and in consequence the engine was precipitated into the river almost before he was aware that anything was wrong. Mr. Pickering, Mr. Pomeroy the agent, and the fireman, were all injured, the latter seriously. The mail bag was rescued before much damage was done to its contents. It was nearly high water, and the engine struck on the opposite side just at the top of the water, not doing much injury to the bridge.

VENTRILOQUISM, ETC. We take pleasure in announcing that Signor Blitz, celebrated as a ventriloquist, will give an exhibition in this town next week. His excellence in this department of his art is unrivalled, which, added to his skill in legerdemain, presents great inducements to all who are desirous of an evening's entertainment. We can give no adequate idea of the superior manner with which he executes his various exhibitions of art but can only say that they excite our especial wonder. We hope there will be a large concourse to greet him at the Town Hall, and feel assured that no one will go away with any other feelings than of great satisfaction.

ALMOST A FIRE. The steam saw mill connected with Mr. Francis Williams' Tannery, came very near being destroyed on Thursday evening last by some lantern palings, which were placed near the chimney to season, taking fire from the heat. It was discovered about eight o'clock and easily extinguished, but had it occurred an hour or two later the conflagration must have been extensive. It no doubt occurred through carelessness.

THE MORMONS. By the last accounts from Nauvoo we learn that the difficulties in that quarter had been settled. The Mormons had crossed the river into Iowa. The posse took possession of the city and had been disbanded except a few for a guard for a few days.

FIRE IN PLYMOUTH WOODS. An extensive fire occurred in the woods in Plymouth on Tuesday, by which two thousand cords of cut wood was destroyed.

A barn was burnt in Plympton on Wednesday, and about eight hundred dollars worth of property destroyed. Insured.

STONE DEPOT. L. Stetson Bates, our readers will perceive, is prepared to furnish customers with Stoves of any pattern, and very cheap too, at his store in Boston. See advertisement.

WHIG NOMINATIONS. At the convention held in Dedham, on Thursday last, Messrs. Samuel Guild of Roxbury, James Maguire of Randolph, and Truman Clark of Walpole, were nominated as candidates for State Senators from Norfolk County, to be supported by the whig party. The two first named gentlemen were members of the Senate last year. An animated discussion ensued on the adoption of the resolutions, which resulted in the passage of a series favorable to anti-slavery action.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS. The whig party of this District, on the 1st inst., nominated by ballot, unanimously, Hon. John Quincy Adams, as a candidate for Representative to Congress from the Eighth District. Resolutions were adopted at the meeting.

SOUTH SHORE RAILROAD. A meeting of the stockholders of this corporation was recently held at Scituate. Alfred C. Hersey of Boston and Ebenezer T. Fogg of Scituate were chosen to complete the organization of the board. It was voted to proceed at once to locate the road; and stockholders have confidence that it will be completed to Cohasset within eighteen months.

COURT AT DEDHAM. There was but little business of interest to this section of the district transacted at the late short term of the Court of Common Pleas at Dedham. Two criminals remain in jail as there was not time to try them. The noted Dr. Bragdon's trial will not take place until the December term. Several indictments were found against individuals in different sections of the county for violations of the license law.

Our readers must attribute the deficiency of reading matter to the crowded state of our advertising columns. Money is wanted at this office.

The largest canal in the world is in China. It was constructed in the tenth century, is two thousand miles long, and passes through, or near, forty-one cities.

Price of admittance to the Fair 12 1/2 cents, Children 6 1/4. Admittance to the Tea Party 25 cents. HANNAH PIERCE, LUCRETIA A. COWING, MARY WESTON, DEBORAH LANE, ELIZABETH H. RICHARDS, MARCIA P. HUNT.

DR. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY. This is a chemical extract of Wild Cherry and Tar. Everybody knows that Wild Cherry possesses important medicinal properties; and Tar Water has long been administered in Consumption and Lung affections generally, by our oldest and safest physicians.

Various remedies, it is true, have been offered and put into notice for the cure of diseases of the lungs, and great have been found no doubt very useful, but of all that have been discovered, it is admitted by physicians, and all who have witnessed its effects, that none has proved as successful as this. For Asthma, Shortness of Breath, and similar affections, it may be pronounced a positive cure. It has cured Asthma in many cases of ten and twenty years standing, after physicians had declared the case beyond the reach of medicine.

This Balsam is made from materials, which Nature has placed in all northern latitudes, as an antidote for diseases caused by cold climates.

Nature is but the name for an effect whose cause is God. Let us not neglect her pleasant dictates.

they having received a LARGE and WELL SELECTED ASSORTMENT of FALL and WINTER GOODS, consisting in part of

TWEED, BROAD, PILOT and BEAVER CLOTH,

Of single and double milled.

Also—A great variety of heavy CASSIMERES and DOESKINS, suitable for Winter Pants.

Heavy Stock of VESTINGS, English Wool and Wool Velvet, Lyons and English SILK VELVET, plain, fancy, and an endless variety of figured and fancy SATIN, all of which we will sell at our usually

REASONABLE RATE OF PRICES.

Deeming a statement of prices a mere catchpole upon the public and perfectly gratuitous, we would merely state that we will sell upon the LOWEST POSSIBLE PROFIT, acting upon the principle of

A FAIR ARTICLE FOR A FAIR PRICE.

Also—SCARFS and FURNISHING GOODS.

N. B. Please call and examine before purchasing elsewhere, as we charge nothing for inspection. An assortment of genteel Ready Made Overcoats and other Garments kept constantly on hand.

Cutting done upon reasonable terms.
Quincy, Oct. 3.

Arrival of Fall and Winter Goods.

JOHN DINEGAN,

MERCHANT TAILOR, School Street, Quincy,

HAS the pleasure to announce the arrival of an IMMENSE and VARIED ASSORTMENT of very heavy BROADCLOTHS, of

English, French and German Manufacture,

that will be suitable for

OVERCOATS, FROCKS OR SACKS,

which he will sell either by the piece or yard, or MAKE INTO GARMENTS at prices
Considerably Less

than he has ever offered to his customers before. Those in want of CLOTHING, at FAIR PRICES, would do well to give him an early call, as the various but SUPERIOR character of his present assortment of

Broadcloths, Cassimeres and Doe Skins,

offers peculiar advantages for judicious selection. He would therefore call the attention of the public to the following list of prices:

For an Overcoat made of extra heavy English, French or German Beaver, well lined and wadded throughout,
Do. double weaved and faced with Silk Velvet, $12 00
Do. made of any color or style that may be desired, 15 00 to 24 00
Frock Coats or loose Sacks will vary from, 4 00 to 10 00
In fact, he can get up as good a suit of Clothes for eighteen dollars as his neighbors in the city charge from twenty to twenty-five dollars for.

VESTINGS.

His Assortment of Vestings must be seen to be appreciated. It consists of VELVETS, Plain and Figured; SATINS; CASHMERE of every style and pattern, and an endless variety of VALENCIAS.
He has also received a good assortment of SATINETTS, that will be sold, or made to order, on the most reasonable terms. He has a first rate article, Double Milled, at 37 1/2 cents the yard, that will do for Men's or Boys' COATS or PANTS.

To the Public.

Sanctioned by public approbation after a trial of years, and encouraged during that time with steady, progressive and increasing trade, satisfactorily testifies that I have merited support. The increase of business and the position I occupy is not the result of sudden caprice but of steady advancement.

My Goods are all imported at the VERY LOWEST notch, and there shall be no deviation from them, as I have but ONE PRICE.

I shall continue to have my Garments made by the best of Journeymen Tailors, therefore I shall be able to let my customers have their Garments made in a style that will bear a comparison with those made in the most celebrated establishments in the city, and nearly one half cheaper, as all my garments are cut by myself; they are therefore Warranted to fit and give perfect satisfaction.

Trimmings of every description, very cheap.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

MOSES RECEIVING THE LAW.

BY F. A. KISOMAN.

Why peals that deaf'ning thunder now?
Why gathers 'round Mount Sinai's brow
Such fearful darkness?
Lo! meteors dart athwart the sky,
And dazzling lightnings blaze on high—
Jehovah's power to earth seems nigh,
In awful greatness.

Hark from that dark and dismal cloud
A heavenly trumpet sounds aloud,
Echoing thro' all space.
Seraphic choirs their songs repeat,
While low before th' Almighty's seat
They bow with love and reverence deep,
Worshipping with praise.

The hosts of Israel hear the sound,
And quickly bending to the ground,
They adore their God.
His majesty they now behold,
As heaven its wonders doth unfold,
'Mid thund'ring v'ys by man unio'd,
But spoken by the Lord.

Anon a lurid cloud of smoke
Gathers around the mountain's top,
Like a shroud of death.
Ethereal fire bursts from on high,
And penetrates the sapphire sky.
While high archangels loudly cry—
"God descends to earth."

Seraphs and cherubs now unite
With all who dwell in heav'nly light,
And hosannas sing.
Their anthems rise before the throne
Of him who reigns—the great "I Am,"
Whose ways, mysterious and unknown,
Exalt him heaven's king.

The mountain to its centre shakes,
And Israel's chief in terror waits
God's behest to hear.
Hark! a voice from heaven is heard,
Around the earth it echoes loud—
'Tis heaven's King—the mighty God,
Bidding him appear!

The holy prophet now obeys
The mandate from the upper skies,
And the mount ascends.
Through frowning clouds his eager sight,
Beholds with awe celestial light,
As gleaming in refu'gence bright,
It to earth descends.

With fear he hears Jehovah speak,
As songs burst forth divinely sweet
From the angel throng.
The holy Law is now proclaimed,
And pledged in oaths to be sustained
By him, who hath in heaven reigned,
Where his praise is sung.

Again loud thunder peals above,
And rattles the law of love,
By Jehovah given.
The mountain side is scathed with fire,
While myriads of the host 'mid choir
Now praise their God with harp and lyre,
Through the courts of heaven.

The law is made and sworn by Him
Who reigns among the seraphim,
'E'en the mighty God.
Moses accepts the holy trust,
And bows with reverence in the dust,
Exalting Him whose ways are just,
Whose power is his word.

The lightning's blaze is seen no more,
The deaf'ning thunders cease to roar,
All is now serene.
Mercy and Justice both combine,
And in the law they brightly shine,
While it proclaims in tones divine—
"God now reigns supreme."

SOLILOQUY OF A MOTHER.

Sleep on, my child, while o'er thy grave
A mother drops her tears;
Sleep on, sweet cherub, take thy rest
Till Jesus Christ appears.

Then may thy little body rise
With happy millions blest,
And sing the song in yonder skies,
Of Christ's redeeming grace.

There may'st thou range the fields of joy,
Those fields of pure delight,
Where no rude sorrows can alloy,
Or pleasing prospects blight.

Where dearest friends no more can part
I'll meet my angel boy—
Where no dire agony rends the heart,
But all is cloudless joy.

ANECDOTES.

"Mary, my dear," said a mother to her little daughter, "why are you not polite to the gentleman? he treats you kindly." "Mother," said the child drawing down her mother's ear, "Mother, he smells of rum!"

"John why don't you sell these umbrellas?" "Can't sir, they're too bad, half the handles are gone, and some hain't any sticks, and there wint cloth enough left to wear by." "Ain't they good for anything at all?" "No sir, not anything." "Then give them to the poor, and don't say I ain't a charitable man."

"I'll bet a sheep," said an old farmer to his other half, "that our boy Otho is going crazy—for he is grinning at the plough, and he is grinning at the barn, and he is grinning at the table, and he is grinning to himself wherever he goes." "Poh," replied the old woman, "don't you know he got a love-letter this morning?"

Dr. Wood's SARSAPARILLA AND WILD CHERRY BITTERS.

For the Permanent Removal of all such diseases as take their rise in an Impure Blood, Impaired Digestion, morbid state of the Liver and Stomach, Weakness of the Nervous System, and a disordered habit of Constitution generally.

DR. WOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters have already, by their substantial excellence, won a degree of public favor and patronage, which puts them beyond the need of recommendation. Being faithfully prepared of the most excellent materials, they can be fully confided in by all in need of a purgative or alternative remedy. Sarsaparilla takes a high rank among Physicians and all others in the list of curative agents, and it is this fact which has rendered it so deservedly popular over all other medicines of the day. In Dr. Wood's standard preparation, it is warranted to be found in great purity and strength, and gaining much by its union with the Wild Cherry, a tonic of the first order. This happy combination is the only one ever made of these articles, and founded as it is on the best medical principles, and its virtues shown by a rigid chemical analysis, experience has extracted its unusual power and efficacy.

This preparation will be found on trial, to be a sure and speedy remedy for the diseases mentioned above. They purify the blood, secure regular digestion, promote a healthy action of the Liver and Stomach, and strengthen the nerves, at once securing HEALTH and VIGOR to the whole system. In all cases of DEPENDING, arising from Indigestion or Nervous irritation, they have been used with remarkable success; nor are they less useful as a remedy for Headache, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, and a general prostration of the system. At the same time, it must be stated, that they are neither violent nor at all dangerous in their operation, securing as they do the desired end by a steady, regular and easy influence. Taken daily, in doses prescribed, they will be found to operate in that gentle and salutary manner, which is, in fact, their highest recommendation.

Mr. E. THORNTON, JR.
Dear Sir,—This is to certify, that my daughter has been troubled with Dyspepsia for a number of years, attended with almost constant headache and other distressing symptoms which accompany this disease. She visited Boston to avail herself of the advice of the justly celebrated physicians of that city, all to no purpose. By the solicitation of a friend, I was induced to purchase a bottle of Dr. Wood's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Bitters. Before taking one bottle she was relieved entirely of the headache, and after taking two or three bottles, the other symptoms entirely disappeared. N. B. GIBBS,
North Fairhaven, Long Plain, June 16, 1845.

Mr. E. THORNTON, JR.
Dear Sir,—My daughter has been for more than two years afflicted with a confirmed Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, together with a severe and constant headache. During this time, she was constantly attended by the most skillful and intelligent physicians, but with little or no relief, until we found the disease was rapidly taking the form of general consumption. At this time, I determined to have recourse to Dr. Wood's Sarsaparilla and Wild Cherry Bitters, as prepared by you, and it gives me the sincerest pleasure to state, that after the use of a few bottles, my daughter was happily restored to perfect health. I have the highest confidence in this medicine, and shall cheerfully recommend it to my friends. Very truly yours, ANSEL WHITE.

The cure described in the above certificate of Mr. White, is by no means a singular one. There are hundreds who have been cured from the most acute or long continued disease, by the use of this excellent and highly popular remedy. The proprietor recommends it to the public with the utmost confidence, for in all cases where it has had a fair trial, it has succeeded beyond the expectations of the patient or even his own. The cure with which it is prepared, and the intrinsic excellence of its materials, should secure, and have secured for it, a character which it well deserves. The prejudice usually existing against advertised medicines, would not be needed if it was not for the fact, that the wonderful cures it has performed, and the acknowledged celebrity of its principal constituents, should at once recommend it to the public favor.

Manufactured and sold by E. THORNTON, JR., Chemist and Druggist, 10 N. Water street, New Bedford, where all orders must be directed.

Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrophula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pustules on the Face, Femals Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impudence in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an injudicious use of Mercury. The completion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernands, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernands, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being composed of roots and herbs, and is collected by Dr. Fernands himself; consequently it is delicate and pure, and even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the incredulous invalid that no more has been said in its favor than its virtues safely warrant. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine in several cases. To prevent imposition, each bill of directions accompanying the medicine will be signed by J. K. Fernands, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States.

THE AUTHOR-HERO.

BY GEORGE LIPFARD.

It was in a time when a band of Rebels sat in Carpenter's Hall, when the smoke of Lexington and Bunker Hill was yet in the sky, and the undried blood of Warren and all the martyrs was yet upon the ground—it was in this time, in the blood-red dawn of our Revolution, that a scene of some interest took place in the city of William Penn.

Look yonder, and behold that solitary lamp, flinging its dim light through the shadows of a nearly furnished room.

Grouped around the table, the glow of the lamp pouring full in their faces, are four persons—a Boston lawyer, a Philadelphia printer, a Philadelphia Doctor, and a Virginia Planter.

Come with me to that lonely room. Let us seat ourselves there. Let us look into the faces of these men—that man with the bold brow and resolute look, is one John Adams, from Boston; next to him sits the calm-faced Benjamin Rush; then you see the marked face of the Printer, one Benjamin Franklin; and last of all, your eye rests upon a man distinguished above all others by his height, the noble outline of his form, and the solemn dignity of his brow. That man is named Washington—one Mr. George Washington, from Mount Vernon.

And these men are all members of the Rebel Congress. They have met here to talk over the affairs of their country. Their conversation is deep-toned—cautious—hurried. Every man seems afraid to give utterance to the thoughts of his bosom.

Confiscation—the gibbet—the axe! These have been the reward of brave men before now, who dared speak treason against his Majesty by the grace of God. Therefore, is the conversation of the four patriots burdened with restraint and gloom.

They talk of Bunker Hill, of Lexington, of the blood-thirsty British Ministry, of the weak and merciful British King.

Then, from the lips of Franklin, comes the great question—where is this war to end? Are we fighting only for a change in the British Ministry? Or—for the Independence of our native land?

There is silence in that room. Washington, Adams, Rush, all look into each other's faces and are silent.

Bound to England by ties of ancestry—language—religion—the very idea of separation from her seems a blasphemy.

Yes, with their towns burnt, their people murdered—Bunker Hill smoking there, Lexington bleeding yonder—still, still these colonists cling to the name of England, still shudder at the big word that chokes their utterance to speak—INDEPENDENCE.

At this moment, while all is still, a visitor is announced. A man somewhat short in stature, clad in a coat of faded brown. He takes his seat at the table, is introduced to these gentlemen by Franklin, and then informed of the topic under discussion. Look upon his brow, his flashing eye, as in earnest words he pours forth his soul.

Washington, Adams, Rush, Franklin, all are hushed into silence. At first, the man in the brown coat startles, horrifies them with his political blasphemy.

But as he goes on, as his broad, solid brow warms with fire, as his eye flashes the full light of a soul roused into all its life, as those deep, earnest tones speak of the Independence of America—her glorious Future—her People, that swell into countless millions—her Navy, that shall whiten the uttermost sea—her Destiny, that shall stride over the wrecks of thrones, to the Universal Empire of the Western Continent!

Then behold—

They rise round the table—they press that man in the brown coat by the hand—nay, the Virginia Planter Washington, grasps both his hands, and in a voice deepened by emotion, begs him for the sake of God, to write these words in a book!

A book that shall be read in all the homes, and thundered from all the pulpits in America. Do you see the picture, my friends?

That man in the brown coat, standing there, flushed, trembling with the excitement of his own thoughts—that splendidly formed Virginia Planter on one side, grasping him by the hand, those great-souled men encircling him on the other, John Adams, Benjamin Rush, Benjamin Franklin. Their gleaming eyes shine with one soul, and read on the great cloud of the future, this one word—INDEPENDENCE.

Let this scene pass: let us follow this man in the brown coat through the year 1775.

The day after this scene, that modest Virginia Planter, George Washington, was named Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army.

And in the summer days of '76, that man in the brown coat was seen walking up and down in front of the old State House, his great forehead shown in full sunlight, while, with his hand placed behind his back, he went slowly along the pavement. Then he would hurry to his lonely garret, seize the quill, and write down the deep thoughts of his brain.

Then forth again for a walk in the State House Square—up and down under these old trees, he wanders all the afternoon—at night, there is a light burning all night, till break of day.

Let us look in that garret window—what see you there?

A rude and neglected room—a man short in stature sitting beside an old table, with scattered sheets of paper all about him—the light of the unsmoked candle upon his brow—that un-failing quill in his hand!

Ah! my friends, you may talk to me of the sublimity of your battles, whose poetry is bones and skulls, whose glories are like the trophies of the butcher's shambles—but for me, there is no battles so awfully sublime as one like this, now being fought before your eyes.

A poor, neglected author sitting in his garret—the world, poverty, time, spare, all forgotten—as with his soul kindled into one steady blaze, he plies that fast moving quill. That quill writes down words on paper, that which shall burn in the brains of kings, words like arrows, winged with fire and pointed with vitriol.

Go on, brave author, sitting in your garret, alone at this dead hour—go on—on through the silent watches of the night, and God's blessings fall like breezes of June upon your damp brow. Go on, in the name of God and man, for you are writing the thoughts of a nation into birth.

For many days, in the year 1775, was that man in the brown coat seen walking up and down the State House Square. The proud Tory passed by him with scorn. Yet he was thinking great thoughts, which would eat away the throne of that Tory's king! The Tory, the vulgar rich man, the small dog in office, passed him by with scorn, but men of genius took him by the arm and called him brother. Look yonder! There in a lonely garret, night after night, burns that solitary lamp, burns, and burns on, till break of day.

At last, the work is done. At last, grappling the loose sheets in his trembling hands—trembling because feverish from the toil of the brain—he rushes forth one morning. His book is written; it now must be printed—scattered to the homes of America. But not one printer will touch the book, not a publisher but grows pale at the sight of those dingy pages. Because it ridicules the British Monarchy; because it speaks out, in plain words, that nothing now remains to be done but to declare the New World free and independent.

This shocks the trembling printers—tough such a mess of treasonable stuff!—never! But at last, a printer is found, a bold Scotchman, named Robert Bell. Write that name on your hearts, for it is worthy all reverence! He transformed those loose pages into type, and on the 1st of January, 1776, Common Sense burst on the people of the New World like a prophecy!

Yes, that book bursts on the hearts and homes of America, like light from heaven. It is read by the Mechanic at his bench; the Merchant at his desk; the Preacher in his pulpit reads it to his people, and scatters its great truths with the teachings of Revelation.

"It burst from the press," says the great Doctor Rush, "with an effect which has been rarely produced by types or paper, in any age or country!"

Ramsey, in his History of the Revolution, and his brother historian, Gordon, solemnly state the fact that this book was a most important cause of the separation from the Mother country.

Thomas Jefferson, Joel Barlow, George Washington, unite in their praises of this work. Long after its publication, Jefferson sent a Government ship to bring the author home from France; Washington invited him to the shelter of his own home; Barlow described him, yes, the man in the brown coat, as "one of the most benevolent and disinterested of mankind; endowed with the clearest perception, an uncommon share of original genius, and the greatest breadth of thought."

In August, 1785, after the battle was fought and the empire established, Congress, in a solemn resolution, stamped the author of Common Sense with their approbation, as one of the greatest of the great men of the Revolution.

This book was the cause and forerunner of the Declaration of Independence.

In this book, for the first time, were written these great words—"The Free and Independent States of America!"

Let us follow this man in the brown coat through the scenes of the Revolution.

In the full prime of early manhood, he joins the army of the Revolution; he shares the crust and the cold with Washington and his men—he is with those brave soldiers on the toilsome march, with them by the campfire, with them in the hour of battle!

Why is he with them?

Is the day dark—has the battle been bloody—do the American soldiers despair? Hark! that printing-press yonder, which moves with the American camp in all its wanderings, is scattering pamphlets through the ranks of the army.

Pamphlets written by the Author-Soldier; written sometimes on the head of a drum—or by the midnight fire, or amid the corpses of the dead. Pamphlets that stamp great hopes and greater truths, in plain words, upon the hearts of the Continental Army.

Tell me, was not that a sublime sight, to see a man of genius, who might have shone as an orator, a poet, a novelist, following, with untiring devotion, the bloody-stamped footsteps of the Continental Army?

Yes, in the dark days of '76, when the soldiers of Washington tracked their footsteps on the soil of Trenton, in the snows of Princeton, there, first among the heroes and patriots, there unflinching in the hour of defeat, writing the "Crisis" by the light of the camp-fire, was the Author-Hero of the Revolution.

Yes, we will look into the half-clad ranks of Washington's army. We will behold each corporal surrounded by a group of soldiers, as he reads aloud the pamphlets of the Author-Soldier. What hope, what joy, what energy gleams over the veteran faces, as words like these break on the frosty air:—

"These are the times that try men's souls. The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it now, deserves the love and thanks of men and women. Tyranny, like hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph."

Do not words like these stir up the blood? Yet can you imagine their effect when read to groups of starved and bleeding soldiers, by the red watch-fire, in the cold air of the winter dawn?

Such words as these stirred up the starved Continentals to the attack on Trenton, and there, in the dawn of that glorious morning, George Washington, standing sword in hand over the dead body of the Hessian Rhöl, confessed the magic influence of the Author-Hero's pen.

The vilest enemy of this Author-Hero, a base hireling of the English Court, yes, even he, Atheist, Blasphemer, libeller of Jefferson and Franklin and Madison, as he was, even he, a thing so small in soul that his very masters were ashamed of him, was forced to confess that—"The cannon of Washington was not more formidable to the British, than the pen of the author of Common Sense."

Is there a heart that does not throb at the name of the author of the Declaration, THOMAS JEFFERSON, the Statesman-Hero of the Revolution?

And do your hearts throb at the mention of his name, and yet refuse to pay even the tribute of one solitary pulsation of justice to the memory of his brother-patriot, his forerunner in the work of Freedom, the Author-Hero of the Revolution—THOMAS PAINE?

OLD BETTY'S. A man should be master of his own house, but the kitchen should be under the control of the wife, and a man has no more right to order there, than a lady would have in interfering with the books of her husband's concern. To see a man continually poking his nose into the affairs of the cook and housekeeper, and constantly worried lest things should go wrong, is to say the least paying a poor compliment to his wife's abilities. Men, keep out of the kitchen, you don't belong there, no more than the house dog. Let the women manage their affairs, and whatever you wish to say to the cook, let it be done through the proper person. If you meddle with your wife's affairs, it is probable, that she will neglect them, and when a man so far forgets his dignity as to be peeping into every grease pot and stew pan, it is about time he put on the apron and helped in the culinary department. An old betty in the house, is a great promoter of discord, the cook will not stand his remarks, and the whole family laugh at him behind his back. —Boston Evening Gazette.

SHORT SERMON. The tomb is the best source of morality. Study avarice in the coffin of the miser; this is the man who accumulates heap upon heap, riches upon riches; see a few square boards enclose him.

Study ambition in the grave of that enterprising man; see his whole designs, his extended projects, his boundless expedients, are all scattered, and end in this fatal gulf of human projects.

Approach the grave of the proud man, and there investigate pride; see the mouth that pronounced lofty expressions condemned to eternal silence; the piercing eye that convulsed the world with fear, covered with a midnight gloom; the formidable arm, that disturbed the destinies of mankind, is now without motion or life.

Go to the tomb of the nobleman and there study quality. Behold his magnificent titles; his royal ancestors; his flattering inscriptions; his learned genealogies, are all gone—or gone to be lost, with himself, in dust.

GOOD ADVICE. What if people do speak against you? Let them feel that you are able to bear it. What is there gained by stopping to correct every word that is whispered to your discredit? Lies will die if let alone; but if you repeat them to this one and another, because your enemies had the impudence to make them, you keep the fire burning, and open the way for a dozen slanders. Keep on your course, go straight forward, and trouble not your head about what is repeated, but feel all the better and wear a less frightful face. Slander never killed a sterling character, and it never will. Her coat will not set upon him, without a pull here, a jerk there, and a twist below; and while this work is going on, the false words are forgotten by the multitude.

CONSCIENCE. A good conscience is to the soul what health is to the body. It preserves a constant ease and serenity within us, and more than counteracts all the calamities and afflictions that can befall us.

MARRIAGE. The marriage ceremony is the most interesting spectacle social life exhibits. To see two rational beings, in the glow of youth and hope, which invests life with the halo of happiness, appear together and acknowledge their preference for each other, voluntarily enter into a league of friendship, and call heaven and earth to witness the sincerity of their solemn vows; to think on the endearing connection, the important consequences, the final separation, the smiles that kindle into ecstasy at their own union, most at length be quenched in the tears of the survivor; but while life continues to endure, it renews sorrows, to rejoice and weep in unison. Be constant, man; be considerate, woman; and what can earth offer so pure as your affections?

CHARITY. Men measure their charity by a peculiar standard. A man who has but a dollar in his pocket would give a penny for almost any purpose. If he had a hundred dollars, he might give one; carry it higher, and there comes a falling off. One hundred dollars would be considered too large a sum for him who has ten thousand, while a present of one thousand would be deemed almost miraculous from a man worth one hundred thousand—yet the proportion is the same throughout, and the poor man's penny, the widow's mite, is more than the rich man's high sounding and widely trumpeted benefaction.—Boston Investigator.

LETTERS.

The following are the letters received from persons who were invited to attend, the Picnic of the cold water army.

PITTSFIELD, 25 Sept. 1846.

Dear Sir—I have your favor of the 15th inst., inviting me to be present at a picnic of the cold water army, to be held at your place. My engagements will deprive me of the pleasure of being present with you on such an occasion. It is of the first importance that the children of the country should be impressed with right views with regard to temperance. And I rejoice to learn that the ladies and gentlemen of Quincy are engaged in promoting this great and good work. Nothing could give me more satisfaction than to witness the display of your cold water army. It is an army destined to victory and victory, too, of the noblest character, bloodless, but of vast importance to the interests of the rising generation.

I wish you great prosperity and success, and extremely regret that it will not be in my power to participate in the pleasure of your meeting. Yours truly,

Geo. N. Briggs.

QUINCY, Saturday, 19 Sept., 1846.

Theodore Kellogg, Esq., Quincy.

Sir—I have received your letter of this date communicating to me the vote of the cold water army, embracing the four districts of this town, at the meeting held in Lyceum Hall last Saturday P. M., the 12th inst., to invite me to be present with several other persons to attend their General Pic Nic and address the meeting to be held in the Town Hall on Tuesday the 22d inst., at 1 P. M.

With my respectful thanks to the Society for the honor done me by this invitation, I regret that a previous engagement out of town, on Tuesday the 22d, will deprive me of the opportunity of attending at the meeting in the Town Hall.

My best wishes are with the Society, for the success of their laudable exertions to promote the total reform of the future age from the vice of Intemperance, and from all other self debasing habits and propensities.

I am with respect, sir, your obedient servant.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

BROOKLINE, 21 September, 1846.

Theodore Kellogg, Esq.

Sir—In answer to your note of the 19th inst., received this morning, I regret to state, that a funeral, which I am engaged to attend, will prevent my compliance with your invitation for to-morrow.

Wishing you much success in enlisting the young to withstand the host of evils arising from the use of any beverage, which can intoxicate, I remain an unflinching friend to the great Temperance Reformation.

Yours truly,

JOHN PIERCE.

Boston, Sept. 23d, 1846.

My dear Sir—Your favor of the 19th is before me—and it would have given me pleasure on many accounts to be with you, but my engagements were such in the city, as to put it quite out of my power. I have no doubt you had a very interesting occasion and I hope that the holy cause in which you are engaged received a new impulse, and that both yourself and your friends will continue your labors to carry it on. It is a work in which every lover of God and humanity must feel an interest.

With sincere regard,

Yours truly,

R. C. WATERSTON.

From Ibrahim Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy Stone Bank.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark:

DEAR SIR—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum.

I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health as he has stated, has been on the decline—that he has had frequent吐 of blood, and to such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed convincing evidence that his health has been restored, and I have it from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great flatulency, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, etc.

I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,

ENGINE TRIAL.

The Washington Engine Company of North Weymouth and Amazon Company of this village met to-day at the Weymouth Landing, for a friendly trial of skill with their engines. The Amazon is a new engine lately purchased by the Fire District established last winter in the towns of Weymouth and Braintree. She has shown herself to-day to be an engine of great power, and to be a valuable acquisition to the vicinity in case of fire. The Washington engine, which is one of Thayer's best tubs, has just been newly painted, and otherwise improved, and with a spirited company appeared to excellent advantage. The trials of skill and power lasted about two hours, and was highly gratifying to a numerous concourse of citizens.

The two companies with the Officers of the Fire District, then marched through several streets of the village to Liberty Hall, and partook of a collation prepared by the Amazon Company, which was partaken of with apparently good relish, after the exercises of the afternoon. After several toasts, speeches, and songs, the company broke up early in the evening with good feelings, having enjoyed a very pleasant interview. The procession was escorted by Raymond's Weymouth Band, and we should do injustice to them and their own feelings, if we did not here say that this is in our opinion the finest band in this vicinity. It is composed of some dozen or fifteen young gentlemen, first rate musicians, well drilled, and they discourse most excellent music.

Braintree, Oct. 8, 1846.

PROCLAMATION.

The following is the Proclamation of his Excellency, the Governor, appointing a day of "Thanksgiving, Praise and Prayer."

Our Pilgrim Fathers, in the infancy of their settlement on the borders of an unexplored wilderness, and, compared with our privileges and enjoyments, under circumstances of destitution, were so deeply impressed with the Divine Goodness towards them that they set apart days for public thanksgiving to that great and good Being who had brought them safely over a wide ocean, and preserved them in the midst of dark forests and savage men.

We, their descendants, are reaping the fruits of their labors, and enjoying the unnumbered mercies of a beneficent Providence. To all classes of our people the past year has been one of signal prosperity. Business has been successful, labor has been rewarded, the productions of the earth have been abundant, the means of education have been improved, and those civil and religious institutions, transmitted to us from our fathers, have secured the uninterrupted enjoyment of individual and public liberty, and the right of every citizen to worship the Creator according to the dictates of his conscience.

Great indeed is our occasion for thanksgiving and gratitude to the parental Author of all our mercies. In imitation of the example of the wise and good who have gone before us, I do, therefore, by and with the advice and consent of the Council, appoint Thursday, the twenty-sixth day of November next, to be observed by the people of this Commonwealth as a day of Thanksgiving, Praise and Prayer.

Most earnestly I request them to suspend the pursuits of business and of pleasure, and on that day, with their ministers of religion, to go up to their places of public worship, present themselves before the altars of the living God, and bear to Him the offerings of grateful, humble, and contrite hearts. Enjoying the temporal blessings bestowed upon us by our heavenly Father, let us remember that our immortal nature needs those spiritual mercies that will "make us wise unto salvation," that we are sinners before the Supreme Judge of Heaven and Earth, and that our only hope of pardon and acceptance with Him, held out in the volume of inspiration, is by "repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ."

Let us humbly pray that God will continue to us as individuals and as a community, those privileges and enjoyments which He has hitherto vouchsafed to us.

That He will dispose the rich in this world's goods to remember the poor, and to show kindness to the widow and to the fatherless.

That He will look propitiously upon the people of our sister States, and bless them:

That He will impart wisdom to the Government of this Union, and direct to such measures as shall promote the best interests of the whole country:

That He will inspire those who conduct the administration of our public affairs with an elevated patriotism, a love of Justice and of Peace, and cause that a speedy termination be put to that war which exists between this and a neighboring Republic, so that the soldiers of their armies shall no more embue their hands with each other's blood, and the sound of lamentation and mourning shall no more be heard for those who are slain in battle: That He will appoint and give efficiency to the means which shall, in his own good time, exhibit to the world a practical illustration of the preeminent and beautiful truth put forth in our Declaration of Independence, "that all men are created equal," and present this great confederacy of States without a bondman within its limits:

Finally, that He will hasten the time when the religion of His Son shall pervade the whole earth, animate the dead, and influence the conduct of every one of its inhabitants, and when the song of Angels, heard by the Shepherds of Judea, shall be echoed by the whole human family, "Glory to God in the Highest, and on Earth Peace and Good Will to men."

Seventy hands employed in the machine shop at Manchester, (N. H.) were paid off and discharged on Tuesday last week, in consequence of their refusing to "light up" during the winter.

Hon. Thomas Sargent, one of the Associate Judges of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has resigned his office, having held the position nearly fourteen years.

The Episcopal Convention, at New York, have decided to pay Bishop Onderdonk twenty-five hundred dollars a year for two years.

The Boston Daily Star has become a whig paper. There was a hurricane at Point Petre, (West Indies) and the interior of the 8th ult.

STENOR BLITZ. The performance of this gentleman on Thursday evening gave great satisfaction to his large audience. The quickness and dexterity of his movements excited the admiration of all and called forth much applause, but his ventriloquial powers were truly wonderful and were in the highest degree amusing. His conversation with imaginary people having all kinds of voices, exhibited great excellence in that peculiar art.

If Signor Blitz should ever repeat his exhibition in this place we hope no one will miss the opportunity of seeing him as we feel assured that they cannot otherwise than feel the highest gratification at his unequalled excellence in ventriloquism and art.

BANK DIVIDENDS. The Quincy Stone Bank declared a semi-annual Dividend of four per cent.; Union Bank of Weymouth and Braintree, three and a half per cent.; Old Colony Bank four per cent.; Plymouth three and half; Hingham three and half.

COUNTY CONVENTION. The democrats of this County held their convention on Tuesday last, in Dedham. E. Beal, Jr., Esq. of Randolph, presided, and an address and resolutions prepared by E. K. Whitaker, Esq., were adopted. The candidates nominated for the support of the democracy of the County for the State Senate are, Dr. Artemas Brown of Medway, E. K. Whitaker, Esq. of Needham, and Col. Jesse Pierce of Stoughton. These gentlemen were supported at the last election for the same office. Mr. Whitaker is a man of superior talents.

DISTRICT CONVENTION. A convention of the democrats of the Eighth Congressional District, held at Dedham on the afternoon of the 6th inst., nominated the Hon. Isaac H. Wright, late Navy Agent for the Port of Boston, as candidate for Congress. The convention was organized by the choice of George Thompson, Esq. of Milton, as president.

LIBERTY CONVENTION. The liberty party of this District have nominated Gen. Appleton Howe of Weymouth as candidate for Congress. It is presumed, however, that a portion of the liberty party will support Ex-President Adams.

At their County Convention, the old candidates for the State Senate were re-nominated, viz: Martin Torrey of Foxboro', John Gulliver of Roxbury, and Willis Fisher of Franklin.

STORE BROKEN OPEN. The store of Mr. Nathan Fisk, clothing dealer, Sea Street, near the South Boston Bridge, was broken open last Monday night, by forcing the back window. As near as can be ascertained, from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars worth of clothing and goods were taken. Three boys have been arrested charged with committing the offence, also of breaking into another store, where they got only a few things.

ACCIDENT ON THE OLD COLONY RAILROAD. The Boston Times says, on Tuesday afternoon, at the crossing of the railroad with the Dorchester turnpike, a man on the track was run into by the train, cutting off both legs below the knee, and crushing his head in such a manner as to scatter about the brains. The verdict of the jury of inquest was, "accidental death." The man's name was Harding, and belonged to Dorchester, aged sixty, and has left a family.

TO CHESS-PLAYERS, MATHEMATICIANS, ETC. A Monthly Magazine called "The Chess Palladium and Mathematical Sphinx," devoted to the cause of the delightful, profound and intellectual science of Chess, is published by Taylor & Co., Astor House, New York, at two dollars per annum, and sold by booksellers at eighteen and three-quarter cents the single number. It contains specimens of American Play, Games, Problems, etc., together with a Mathematical Department, stored with a rare collection of curious, difficult and entertaining Problems, many in verse, Arithmetical and Mathematical.

DOVER TELEGRAPH. A small weekly sheet, but well filled with interesting reading matter, with this title, has recently been commenced at Dover, (N. H.) by our old friend Wm. D. Crockett, Esq. We wish him abundant success in his new enterprise. Friend C. can get out a handsome paper, as the numbers before us testify, but how he can afford it for fifty cents per annum is beyond our comprehension.

PREPARE FOR WINTER. Now is the time to provide caps and furs for cold weather, and readers wishing to supply themselves, cannot do better than call on Mr. Shute, 173 Washington Street, Boston. As a contemporary remarks, chill and dreary winter loses half its terrors when we contemplate the mountain heaps of warmth imprisoned in his spacious rooms. Business, at his establishment, is conducted on right principles, and customers can select goods of the latest fashion and best quality from a rich and varied stock.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT. Mr. John Glover of Dorchester, while at work in a steam planing machine in that town, on Saturday last, had his left hand caught by the machinery, and drawn within the range of four knives which revolve with great rapidity. His arm was instantly severed about two inches below the elbow. He is likely to recover of the wound. As he was a left handed man, the loss will be greater than if his right arm had suffered.

There is no getting on in the world without gold in the pocket, iron in the hand, silver in the tongue or brass on the forehead.

The regiment of volunteers at Fort Leavenworth, ordered to be disbanded, will cost the government upwards of fifty thousand dollars.

The Albany insurance companies now add ten cents extra per hundred dollars, for insurance on stores and property in them, which are lighted by camphene or spirit gas.

It is said that Queen Victoria, when yet a princess, on being informed of the starving condition of the manufacturing population, exclaimed—"Dear me! how foolish! what do they starve for? I would eat bread and potatoes before I would starve!"

Babe, the pirate, sailed from New York last week, as a steerage passenger in the Queen of the West, for Liverpool.

Only two towns in the State of Rhode Island have granted licenses to sell intoxicating liquors.

The British Government is seriously considering the project of constructing a ship canal around the falls of the St. Mary, thereby opening a communication for the largest class of vessels, with Lake Superior. A survey of the route is now in progress. The length of the canal required is only two miles, and the estimated cost, but two hundred thousand dollars.

A hog was exhibited in Hartford, (Ct.) last week, which weighed eleven hundred pounds.

A wise thinker has said that the reason why any people know comparatively nothing is, that they can never be told any thing.

Counterfeit $2's of the Worcester Bank, are in circulation.

On the German Railroads there are two hundred and ninety six locomotive engines,—one hundred and ninety four of English manufacture, fifty seven German and twenty nine American.

A monument to cost three thousand is to be erected in memory of Thomas Freeborn, the pilot who lost his life during the severe gale on the coast of New Jersey, last February.

The Great Western experienced a severe gale during her late voyage, and was badly damaged. The passengers were much alarmed. Meetings were held, prayers offered, and the holy communion administered. After the gale subsided, about a thousand dollars were taken, four hundred for the captain and crew and five hundred and eighty towards a fund for the relief of families whose heads may be lost at sea. A resolve was passed expressive of gratitude to Almighty God, and of regard for the officers, etc.

The amount of Treasury notes outstanding on the 1st inst., was $2,240,333.

Of the myriad real tragedies which are hidden behind the veil of conventional life, not a few are there in which woman plays a ministering angel—and builds amid the wreck of happiness, a saving ark, by the spell of her trusting faith, and wisdom that is of the heart.

Prof. Ebenezer Kellogg, Professor of Languages at Williams College since 1814, died last week.

A railway editor, in announcing the death of a passenger, says "he has gone to that station from which no traveller has a return ticket."

There is in the town of Worthing, (Eng.) an orchard of fig trees which produce annually about fifteen hundred dozen figs.

Efforts are making in Boston to establish an asylum for discharged convicts.

It is said that John H. Pearson & Co. are willing to give twice as much as any body else to ransom the mulatto whom they returned to New Orleans. The Chronotype thinks they had better purchase and give him his liberty on their own hook, and charge the expense to profit and loss.

Of the two hundred and three prisoners in Auburn prison, all but one were addicted to drunkenness.

The journeymen tailors of Cincinnati are on a turnout for higher wages.

Did one ever see one woman pass another without afterwards turning round to see how she was dressed?

The statement which went the rounds of the papers, that the Hutchinson Family had realized thirty thousand dollars by their trip to England, is now contradicted. The assertion that they had purchased a farm for twelve thousand dollars, also proves erroneous, as there is not a farm of that value in the whole town where they reside.

The Connecticut river, it is said, has not been so low for forty years as it has been for a few weeks past.

Hon. Francis Baylies of Taunton, and Charles W. Moore, Esq. of Charlestown, have been nominated by the Native Americans for Governor and Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts.

A keg containing five thousand Spanish dollars was discovered on the shore of Nantucket, a few days since, after an unusually low ebb tide, by two men belonging to that place. It is supposed to be part of the cargo of a brig wrecked near there fifteen years ago.

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. Extract of a letter from Mr. Jas. Emerson, Apothecary and Druggist, dated Salem, (Mass.) Oct. 30, 1845.

"A gentleman in this city, who has been for some time troubled with a bad cough, and other strong symptoms of Consumption, was induced by my recommendation to try a bottle of it. He was so well pleased with its effects, that being about to visit the south, he purchased a number of bottles. His family inform me he has not been so well for four months, as since he began to take the Balsam. Please send me a further supply as soon as convenient.

Respectfully yours, etc. JAMES EMERTON."

Notice.

To the Honorable County Commissioners within and for the County of Norfolk:

THE undersigned, inhabitants of the town of Weymouth, respectfully represent, that the Public are suffering great inconvenience from the narrow and crooked road from the line between Weymouth and Randolph, through Randolph Street, so called, to Pond Street, near the house occupied by Freeman Vinson, in said Weymouth, and therefore request your Honors to view said road and cause to be made such alterations therein, as shall in some measure remedy the evil as above represented. And they also request your Honors to view the Road leading from Columbian Square, by the house of Appleton Howe, to Main Street, near the house of Perez Loud, and cause to be made such alterations in the same as the nature of the case would seem to require for public convenience. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

Arrival of Fall and Winter Goods.

JOHN DINEGAN,

MERCHANT TAILOR, School Street, Quincy.

HAS the pleasure to announce the arrival of an IMMENSE and VARIED ASSORTMENT of very heavy BROADCLOTHS, of

English, French and German Manufacture,

that will be suitable for

OVERCOATS, FROCKS OR SACKS,

which he will sell either by the piece or yard, or MAKE INTO GARMENTS at prices

Considerably Less

than he has ever offered to his customers before. Those in want of CLOTHING, at FAIR PRICES, would do well to give him an early call, as the various but SUPERIOR character of his present assortment of offers peculiar advantages for judicious selection. He would therefore call the attention of the public to the following list of prices:

For an Overcoat made of extra heavy English, French or German Beaver, well lined and wadded throughout, - - - - - $12 00
Do. double weaved and faced with Silk Velvet, - - - - - 16 00
Do. made of any color or style that may be desired, - - - - - 18 00 to 24 00
Frock Coats or loose Sacks will vary from, - - - - - 4 00 to 10 00
In fact, he can get up as good a suit of Clothes for eighteen dollars as his neighbors in the city charge from twenty to twenty five dollars for.

VESTINGS.

His Assortment of Vestings must be seen to be appreciated. It consists of VELVETS, Plain and Figured; SATINS; CASHMERE of every style and pattern, and an endless variety of VALENCIANS.

He has also received a good assortment of SATINETTS that will be sold, or made to order, on the most reasonable terms. He has a first rate article, Double Milled, at 37 1-2 cents the yard, that will do for Men's or Boys' COATS or PANTS.

To the Public.

Sanctioned by public approbation after a trial of years, and encouraged during that time with steady, progressive and increasing trade, satisfactorily testifies that I have merited support. The increase of business and the position I occupy is not the result of sudden caprice but of steady advancement.

My Goods are all marked at the VERY LOWEST notch, and there shall be no deviation from them, as I have but ONE PRICE.

I shall continue to have my Garments made by the best of Journeymen Tailors, therefore I shall be able to let my customers have their Garments made in a style that will wear a comparison with those made in the most celebrated establishments in the city, and nearly one half cheaper, as all my garments are cut by myself; they are therefore Warranted to fit and give perfect satisfaction.

Trimnings of every description, very cheap.

POETRY.

THE PRINTER'S DOOM.

A printer, weary and wan,
His face all mortally pale,
As he wearily plodded his homeward way
Before the breaking of early day,
Broke out in a bitter wail.

His voice was husky and low,
As though his lungs were gone;
And he cough'd, and gasp'd, and cough'd again,
And he press'd his hand on his heart in pain,
While thus his plaint ran on.

"A world of toil is this!
It hath no joy for me;
'Tis labor by day, and labor by night,
By the light of the sun, and by candle light—
Labor continually.

"Some men have a day of rest,
But Sabbath for me is not:
It is toil all the week, and toil on the day
That God has given to rest and to pray—
Lo this is the printer's lot!

"When I was a boy," he said,
"I play'd on the hills of green;
I swam in the stream—I fished in the brook—
And blessed was I to sit and look Unfetter'd on nature's scene.

"For twenty sad years, or more,
My life has worn away
In musky rooms of poisonous air,
When I've yearn'd for a sight of the valleys fair
And the light of the open day.

"An innocent prisoner doom'd,
My heart is heavy within;
O why should a man untaunted by guilt,
Who the blood of a creature never hath spilt,
Be pent, like a felon, for sin?"

The printer then cough'd and sigh'd—
The stars were growing dim,
And he upwards glanced at the morning sky,
And he idly thought it were good to die,
And death would be rest to him.

His heart was tired of beating;
He pray'd to the Lord above
To pity a man whose heart had been given
By toil, for other men's interest given,
And he wept for His mercy and love.

He lifted his humble home:
His infant awoke to cry,
"O father! O mother! I'm hungry for bread!"
And the printer bow'd down, with an aching head,
On his Mary's lap to die.

O ye who have never known
The richness that's in a crust
When nothing is found on the desolate shelf,
And the sufferer's pocket is empty of self—
Receive my story on trust.

Say not in your careless scorn,
What boots the tale to you?
The rhymers who trace these roughly writ rhymes
Hath known of such sufferers in other day-tunes,
And the main of his rhyme is true.

Remember this holy truth—
The man who aloof hath stood
When a heart broken brother for succor did crave,
And he stretch'd not a finger to bless and to save,
Is verily guilty of blood!

ASK NOT IF STILL I LOVE.
Ask not if still I love,
Too plain these eyes have told thee;
Too well their tears must prove
How near and dear I hold thee.

If, where the brightest shine,
I see no form but thine
To feel that earth can show
No bliss above thee—
If this be love then know
Thus thus, that thus, I love thee.

'Tis not in pleasure's idle hour
That thou canst know affection's power.
No, try its strength in grief or pain;
Attempt, as now, its bonds to sever,
Thou'lt find true love's a chain
That binds forever!

ANECDOTES.

James I. of England went out of his way to hear a noted preacher. The clergyman seeing the king enter, left his text to declaim against swearing, for which the king was notorious. When done, James thanked him for his sermon; but asked him what connection swearing had with the text. He answered, "Since your majesty came out of your way through curiosity to meet me, I could not, in compliance, do less than go out of mine to meet you."

A discontented man was quite too much in the habit of reminding his second wife what an excellent manager his first wife was. Out of all patience, in turn, he was comforted with the remark that no one regretted her death more than she did.

"May it please your honor," said a lawyer, addressing one of the judges. "I brought the prisoner from jail on a habeas corpus."
"That's a good one!" said a fellow in an undertone, who stood in the rear of the court. "I'm blow'd if I haint seen him some here in a cab."

Said Bill to Jack, "How many legs would a calf have, calling the tail one?" "Five," said Jack. "No, it wouldn't," said Bill, "for calling the tail one wouldn't make it so, would it?"

FOR THE CURE OF

Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrophula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obstructed Catarrhus, Eruptions, Pimples or Puslules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impurity in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an impudious use of Mercury. The Arcanum is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernandis, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernandis, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernandis himself; consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions, or even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the patient of its efficacy, and that no more has been said in its favor than its virtues safely warrant. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine.

To prevent imposition, each bill of particulars accompanying the medicine will be signed by J. K. Fernandis, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States.

JOS. J. CLARK, Agent for New England States.

CERTIFICATES.

From W. Abercrombie of Quincy, Merchant

Trader.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernandis' Medicine.

Sir—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Inflammation of the Lungs, and Disease of the Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast en-tailing upon me the worst of all human diseases to which mortals are heir—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines, but have not been cured. About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernandis' Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.

WYMAN ABERCROMBIE.

Quincy, April 30, 1843.

From Ibrahim Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy

Stone Bank.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark:

DEAR SIR—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernandis' Vegetable Indian Arcanum.

I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health as he has stated, has been on the decline—that he has had frequent turns of spitting blood, to such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed continuing evidence that his health has been restored, and I have from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernandis' Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great fatality, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, &c.

I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,

IBRAHIM BARTLETT.

Quincy, May 24, 1843.

Price. $1.00 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.00.

Quincy, Aug. 22.

the minister commenced the ceremony, and it was with a palpitating heart, and a mind bordering on distraction, that the clerk witnessed its progress, until the words were uttered—

Will you take this man to be your wedded husband.

While every breath was held to catch the answer, the bride raised her head, and with her eyes beaming full upon her true lover answered with a low, but clear and distinct voice—

No!

Imagine the consternation and dismay that ensued. The young clerk sprang forward and seized her hand, the half married calico merchant looked the very image of despair, and in answer to the numberless questions poured in by friends, relations and guests, the bride repeated her decision, avowing her love for the young clerk, and declared she never would marry any other.

At this critical moment the scene was interrupted by the unceremonious intrusion of two men, one of whom extending a paper, advanced to the so-called bridegroom, who betrayed evident symptoms of alarm, and clapping him upon the shoulder, arrested him as a forger and fugitive from justice. An explanation ensued; the calico merchant, in spite of his protestations, was hurried off; and the parents of the bride joyed to think how nearly they had escaped wedding their daughter to misery, gladly consented to receive the young clerk as her husband, and a happier wedding party, we venture to say, never met.

THE FLOWER AND THE LEAF.

Under the sunny sky of the East, in a perfumed garden, a shrub spread its green branches, laden with flowers, which greatly distinguished themselves in the evening and morning breeze. A young flower, scarcely blown, sprung out, wooingly, to the warm air. Happy in the possession of life, it played with the dew drop, dilated its cup and proudly raised itself on its thorny stalk. As the leaves which encircled it prevented it from abandoning itself to every jerk of its coquetry, it chided them by saying—

Your continual neighborhood annoys me; your entwinings fatigue me; and I long for the moment when I am free and alone.

Young insolent! your cares constrain thee, and our solicitude bears heavily on thee," said one of the oldest leaves of the shrub. "This is so like youth; ungrateful from ignorance, you rebel against those who protect you, and murmur against guards the importance of which you do not comprehend. Fool that thou art, what would become of thee if we did not shelter thee against the fire of an eastern sun?—if we did not guard thee against the wind which comes in blasts from the desert?—if we did not defend thee from the attack of insects? and if we did not conceal thee from the eyes of those who would only touch to destroy thee?"

The young flower, insensible to this lesson, only made more ardent wishes for its liberty. Alas! its premature wishes were only too soon gratified. Towards evening the gardener came and stripped it of all its leaves, for the composition of an essence, and the flower stood alone, proud and delighted with its independence. Its joy was of short duration. The cold night made it tremble; the morning rain bent it on its stalk; against its petals, shrinking with fear, a filthy insect came and glued its hideous spittle. Towards noon, a child, attracted by the gaudy colors it yet displayed, plucked it without pity; and in an hour after the poor flower lay without form and life, trampled in the alley of the garden.

Young daughters! your mothers and your relatives know better than you what are the dangers which, under a thousand forms, threaten your career. They also know, far better than you can, the means of guiding your youth. Submit then, implicitly to their guidance. Consider that by your self-denials of a day you avoid the misery of a disturbed life.

GROUTY.

Get angry—jaw like the evil one, if you please—and then come to yourself and be a man. But we beg of you don't be groaty and have the sulks for a week at a time. If there is a despicable wretch on God's footstool, it is one of your sulky devils, who will not give you a civil answer for a month after you have displeased him. He is worse than the brute. Tread on a dog's tail and he will snap at you at once—the next moment he forgets it and is as loving as ever. Tread on the toes of a human dog and he will walk away to treat you like an outcast for a twelvemonth perhaps.

Talk as you may against a quick temper, the pressor is an angel in comparison to the creature we have described. He lets fly at once all he has to say and that is an end of it. Ten minutes after, if you call upon him, he extends his hand and exclaims—what a fool I was to get angry! and is as kind and as sociable as ever.

The groaty cur says nothing, grits his teeth, perhaps, and for years may be silently working against your interest. He never forgives—never forgets. He goes mincing along—as stiff as a poker—and every opportunity he gets, unseen, he will spit tobacco juice on your coat or maim the trees on your premises.—Portland Tribune.

TRUTH. The man who wants the bayonet and the law to enforce his opinions, admits from bygone conclusions, that his arguments are not in themselves sufficient to enforce conviction.

WORKING GIRLS.

Happy girls!—who can but love them? With cheeks like the rose—bright eyes and elastic step—how cheerfully they go to their work! Our reputation for it, such girls will make excellent wives. Blessed indeed will those men be who secure such prizes. Contrast with these contented, cheerful, smiling girls, those who do nothing but sigh all day, and live only to follow the fashions—who never earn the bread they eat, or the shoes they wear—who are languid and sick and lazy from one week's end to the other. Who but a simpleton and a popinjay would prefer one of the latter, if he were looking for a companion? Give us the working girls. They are worth their weight in gold. You never see them mincing along, or jump a dozen feet to steer clear of a spider or a fly. They have no affectation—no silly airs about them. When they meet you, they speak without putting on a dozen airs, or trying to show off to better advantage, and you feel as if you were talking to a human being, and not a painted, fallen angel.

If girls knew how sadly they miss it, while they endeavor to show off their delicate hands and unsold skins, and put on a thousand airs they would give worlds for the situation of the despised working ladies, who are so far above them in intelligence, in honor, in every thing, as the heavens are above the earth. Be wise, then, ye who have made fools of yourselves through life. Turn over a new leaf, and begin, though late, to live and act as human beings, as companions to immortal man, and not playthings and dolls. In no other way can you be happy and subvert the designs of your existence.—Portland Tribune.

AUTUMN.

The season of sad associations, of serious thoughts, of dreams half gloomy and half pleasant, of a soothing, delicious melancholy. O, do love thee, Autumn, with all thy sadness. I know full well thou bringest along with thee the tokens of decay and death, but there is a beauty, a chastening influence in that decay which makes thee so lovely, and throws such a breathing holiness over all thy scenes that thou art endeared to me as a cherished sister, and I think of thee and speak of thee with all the tenderness that associates itself with the memory of a departed friend. I love to hear the rustling of the faded leaves as they bid adieu to the parent tree, and throw themselves upon the bosom of the gentle gales to follow their bidding. I love the sighing of thy winds, though I feel that they are sighing their requiem over the bright things of summer. I love the splendid drapery of thy forests, the thousand and glorious hues in which they are decked, though I know this is but the lightening up of the spirit of beauty for a moment ere its final extinction. Yes, eldest daughter of the year, I love thy scenes, all thy associations. I am sad under the strange influence, yet happy. I would not be gay if I could. There is a subdued reverence in my affection for thee, which banishes everything that might seem to bespeak a forgetfulness that thou art with me. O, how many times have I breathed the wish that thou mightest be with me when I am dying. I never feel so willing to go as when my spirit drinks in the sweet and soothing sadness of thine own. I look around me, and all is changed—the earth has folded up her garment of green—the flowers have perished—the birds have gone—their glad music is hushed in silence—the winds have gathered the leaves to their burial—and why should I wish to stay when all are going? O, come then, gentle Autumn, when my time is arrived, come take me by the hand, and I will go with thee willingly.—Rev. T. B. Thayer.

GREAT PROJECT. A plan is seriously in contemplation, to unite all the railroads which run out of Boston by a semicircular sweep of a few miles, from East Boston to the Old Colony Road. The most obvious advantage of such an arrangement would be the placing of each of the roads at once upon the tide water. The load of cotton for Lowell, for instance, might be lifted from the hold of the vessel into the cars designed to carry it to its destination. Similar conveniences might be afforded to the other roads.

IMPORTANT INVENTION. Francis Dixon of Lynn has made a most important improvement in the art of gunnery. It is applicable to pistols, muskets, rifles and cannon; and by its application balls may be discharged at the rate of thirty or forty in a minute. By the simple movement of a handle a cannon may be made to load, prime, ignite and discharge itself. It will also make discharges with equal facility whether advancing or retreating. In short it is one of the greatest improvements ever made in the art of gunnery, and must put great power into the hands of the nation possessing it.

GIRDLED TREES. Should the bark of the trees be eaten off by mice or other creatures, the life of the tree may often be preserved by connecting the lower with the upper bark by inserting, according to the size of the tree, several scions under the bark, one end below and the other above the girdle, cover over the wound and scions by grafting clay. The scions, which should be placed near each other round the tree, will be so many channels to convey the sap up the tree over the wound and thereby preserve it. In one season the bark through the aid of the scions will again be united.

GRAPE VINES AND FRUIT TREES.

Grape-vines and fruit trees do not need stable manure, nor an other manure prepared by animals. The best manures for them are such as have no more nitrogen than is contained in common vegetable matter. Therefore, nothing is better for them than plain rotten wood, hay, sawdust, leaver, chips, shavings, straw or swamp-muck. These, together with lime and ashes—even leached ashes, and anthracite and bituminous coal ashes, will make vines and fruit trees grow large, healthy, and highly productive. These manures cost little, and can be had almost any where, and may be applied at any time.

Those living in the neighborhood of a saw-mill have a fine opportunity of getting a cheap and highly useful article. The saw-dust of hard woods, particularly oak and hickory, is the very best manure for grape vines and fruit trees that can be obtained. Scattered over the surface of the ground under the vine or tree, with a due proportion of alkaline substances, it has a most charming effect upon the productiveness of it.

A swamp hole upon a farm might be made almost as valuable as a gold mine. The mud taken out in the fall, and compost made of it with lime, ashes, finely powdered charcoal and plaster, and let lie till spring, with an occasional turning over during the winter, will make a manure cheaper and better than nitrate of potash and many other costly fertilizers. Dug or ploughed in among the roots of vines and fruit trees, or even scattered over the surface and under the plants, it would have a very beneficial effect upon the prospects of the fruit raising. When those cannot be obtained, rotten straw, hay, chips, shavings, or leaves, are better than more costly substances.

Therefore, when farmers or horticulturalists have a swamp, whence they may procure swamp muck, or live near a saw-mill where they can obtain the saw dust, and neglect to use these articles, but, instead of this, send hundreds of miles for guano, nitrate of potash, silicate of potash, and other costly materials, we should not at all be astonished at numerous failures among them, and the poverty which annoys and hampers them at every turn. If they alone were the losers, we should not so much complain, for we should consider their sufferings and loss as a punishment for their folly; but they retard the course of scientific agriculture, and by that means, check the progress of mankind in knowledge and happiness.—Farmer's Cabinet.

VALUE OF COB MEAL. It has been the opinion of most farmers, that corn cobs are of little or no value, and they have generally thrown them aside as no use except for manure. The experience of some who have formerly fed corn and meal, and the anticipated scarcity of hay, have led nearly all of our corn growers to turn their cobs into food for stock. To show something of the extent to which it has been used, the following will give you some data from which to judge. One mill has, within the last three months, ground more than five thousand bushels of cobs besides a large quantity of corn in the ear. This fact proves most conclusively, that cob meal is valuable as an article of food for stock. Indeed the opinion which is expressed by those who have used it, is altogether in its favor. When they get out their corn it is not thrashed entirely clean; some three to fifteen bushels of corn are left on the cobs. They are kept clean as possible till ground into meal. Cattle, horses, sheep and hogs, eat it readily without adding other grain. When fed to cattle, in addition to hay, a marked difference is seen from those fed on hay without the meal. Some feeders mix with it other grain, roots, etc., with marked profit and success. When fed with oil cake it is found to answer an excellent purpose, as it takes up oil without waste.—Albany Cultivator.

ADVICE TO YOUNG MEN. Let the business of every one alone, and attend to your own. Don't buy what you don't want; use every hour to advantage, and study to make even leisure hours useful; think twice before you spend a shilling; remember you will have another to make for it; find recreation in looking after your business, and so your business will not be neglected in looking after recreation; buy low, sell fair and take care of the profits; look over your books regularly, and if you find an error trace it; should a stroke of misfortune come upon you in trade, retrench—work harder, but never fly the track; confront difficulties with unflinching perseverance, and they will disappear at last; though you should even fall in the struggle, you will be honored; but shrink from the task and you will be despised.

How to Revive a Declining Fruit Tree. Should a favorite fruit tree by age or other cause show symptoms of decline and cease to bear so plentifully as formerly; it may be restored to its former vigor by planting a young thrifty natural tree of its kind (first taking off all its limbs) near the roots of the old tree say two feet distance—then cut off the top diagonally and bend it so as to insert it under the bark of the old tree, in other words, engraft it into the trunk and it will become a part of the old tree and thus by supplying it with the sap of a young and vigorous tree, will renew its age and thriftiness, and will cause it to bear fruit as formerly for it will have the roots of two trees. This is now practised with good success by many Horticulturalists.

Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrophula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pusules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impedance in Life, Enlargement and Pains in the Uterus, and Diseases arising from an impudicous use of Mercury. The complexion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernand, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernand, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernand himself; consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions, or even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the incredulous, provided that no bottle has been sold in its favor than its virtues safely warranted. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine.

To prevent imposition, each bill of directions accompanying the medicine will be signed by Dr. Fernand, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States, J. K. FERNANDS, Indian Physician.

JOS. J. CLARK, Agent for New England States.

CERTIFICATES.

From W. Abercrombie of Quincy, Merchant Trader.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

Sir—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Indigestion of the Lungs, and Disease of the Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast en-tailing upon me the worst of all human diseases to which mortals are heir to—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines which were recommended, but from all of them I obtained not the least relief. About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any doubt since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.

WYMAN ABERCROMBIE.

Quincy, April 26, 1843.

From Abraham Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy Stone Bank.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark.

Dear Sir—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum.

I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health, as he has stated, has been on the decline—that he has had frequent turns of spitting blood, to such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed convincing evidence that his health has been restored, and I have from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times was very distressing, great debility, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, etc. I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly revived, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,

ABRAHAM BARTLETT.

POTATO ROT. The old saying that "it is an ill wind that blows nobody good," has been happily illustrated in the saving effect the late continued dry weather has had on the potatoes. From more sources than one it is stated that the rot, which was making sad havoc, received a sudden check during the intensely hot weather, and crops that had been given up for lost, promise a good sound yield. Some of our teetotal friends, however, complain that their wells have refused their wonted supply.—Northampton (Mass.) Gazette.

SOUTH SHORE RAIL ROAD. During the past week some active measures have been taken to forward this undertaking, and from the efforts made by gentlemen interested in the result we have reason to hope that the road will speedily be built. From statistics which have been furnished, and we believe they have been made with great accuracy, there seems no reason to doubt that the capitalist will find in its stock a safe and profitable investment. And while on this subject we will allude to high and low fares system as practised by some of our Railroads in years past, and from a careful examination of the results of the different experiments it seems to be well settled that wherever high prices are charged for freight and passenger transportation, the dividend to the stockholder is less and the premium on the shares is smaller than under the low fare system. This result was particularly shown by the proceedings of the Western Rail Road, and the Directors of that Company have reduced the fare to two thirds the original charge. A further reduction would undoubtedly yield a larger income to the road. In regard to the present prices of the stock of different companies it will be observed that generally those demanding the lowest rates of fare command the highest premium, to wit:

	Av. per mile.	Prem. on st'k.
Boston and Lowell, ?	33-100	19 pr. c. adv.
Lowell and Nashua, ?	33-100	26 " "
Nashua and Concord, ?	21-3	32 " "
Fitchburg and Boston, ?	21-2	18 " "

The four Companies above named transport freight and passengers at a less price than any other roads in New England and their stock is by far the best in the market. There are some exceptions to the principle as above stated, arising perhaps from local causes, but as a general thing it will be found that Rail Road Companies which demand moderate fares pay the best dividends and their stock command the highest premiums.

SIEGE OF MONTEREY. Again has the gallant American army under General Taylor met the Mexican forces at Monterey, and, after a hard fought battle for two days, achieved a victory, a parallel to which, in the annals of history, is yet unrecorded. If the six thousand Americans had met eleven thousand Mexicans, or eleven thousand of any other nation under heaven, upon an open plain in a fair field of battle, it would have occasioned no surprise to have heard the tidings that the enemy were vanquished—that their ordinance were taken—that the day was ours, and that the American Standard was floating in its simple majesty over a field of carnage and blood. But against an enemy with double the number of soldiers—with their cannon pointed at every quarter of the horizon—fortified on all sides with heavy batteries of mortars and howitzers—protected from our fire by fortifications of stone, that our noble troops should have obliged the Mexicans to capitulate we feel a degree of surprise mingled with our gratitude, at the success of the American arms at the siege of Monterey. True indeed was the exclamation of the Earl of Chatham to the British Parliament during our revolutionary struggle—"You cannot conquer America,"—but had he lived till this day he would not only have seen that what he foretold in prophecy had been verified in history, but that American arms were not only unconquered but invincible.

VERMONT ASYLUM FOR THE INSANE AT BRATTLEBORO. By the tenth annual Report, which has just been published, the Institution appears to be in a prosperous condition. The new buildings have been completed and are nearly filled. Four hundred and sixty have enjoyed its advantages the past year, one hundred and ninety seven have been admitted, one hundred and sixty two have been discharged, and two hundred and ninety-one now remain. Of those discharged, ninety-four have recovered. The terms fixed at two dollars per week for the first six months, and one dollar and fifty cents per week afterwards. Patients from other States are received on the same terms as those from Vermont.

STATE MANUAL LABOR SCHOOL. The Commissioners appointed by the Governor and Council to select and obtain an eligible site for a Manual Labor School, for the employment, instruction and reformation of juvenile offenders, have concluded a negotiation for a farm in Westborough, at the price of eight thousand dollars. It contains nearly two hundred acres of land, abundant in fruit, and is situated on the north side of a beautiful sheet of water which it overlooks. The situation is one of the most delightful anywhere to be found, and easy of access.

YATCH RACE. The boat race at New York, between the Maria of New York and the Coquette of Boston, resulted in the success of the latter which beat the former four miles.

LARGE TERRITORY. New Mexico and Upper California, both of which Departments are now in possession of American forces, are immensely large, and together comprise the whole country between the United States and the Pacific Ocean, from latitude forty-two down to thirty-two or thirty-three. Matamoras is in latitude twenty-six, and Monterey in about the same latitude, two hundred miles inland.

WAX STATUARY. Mrs. Pelby's exhibition of wax statuary, which we are pleased to learn is attracting crowds of visitors at the late Swedenborgian Chapel in Phillips Place, Boston, is a highly meritorious galaxy of art. No one visiting the city should fail to visit this graphic delineation of several important subjects of the sacred volume. The "Trial of Christ" consists of eighty five, distinct figures, all as large as life, and the mind of the beholder is riveted by the solemnity which seems to pervade them and he feels as if a participant in the scene. The other groups of figures are equally attractive, and an hour might be profitably spent in contemplating them. The price of admission has been reduced to twelve and a half cents.

THE GALE. We were visited on Tuesday night with a violent gale from the south west, accompanied by some rain. A barn situated at "Hough's Neck," was blown down, which is all the damage done in this town that we have heard of. The papers speak of much damage done in other places, buildings blown down, trees uprooted, etc., and of injury done to shipping in the harbor. The storm was more severe at New York and further south.

SECOND GROWTH. We have seen a bunch of apples of the second crop, taken from a tree belonging to Mr. William Packard of this town, during the past week. There were four in the bunch, about the size of walnuts.

DEFAULTING CASHIER. The trial of Hon. Barker Burnell, indicted for embezzling the funds of a Bank at Nantucket, of which he was Cashier, has been continued to the June term of the Court of Common Pleas, 1847. He was surrendered to the Court by his bondsmen and committed to jail.

SENTENCED. Otto Sutor, the man who attempted to rob and murder the Cashier of the Lancaster (Mass.) Bank, to which indictments he plead guilty, has been sentenced to two days solitary confinement and eighteen years hard labor in the State Prison at Charlestown.

AN APPALLING FACT. There were two hundred and seventy-five cases on the docket of the Court of Common Pleas at Worcester, the recent term, of which two hundred and thirty-one were for offences begun in liquor, sixteen for assaults, and twenty-eight for other offences.

PENNSYLVANIA. The whigs have gained four Congressmen—the democrats have lost four and gained one—the natives have lost one. Nothing definite as to the state of parties in the Legislature. But few of the returns have been received.

LARGE GROWTHS. Capt. Frederic Hardwick, jr. of this town, has raised in his garden, this season, a turnip beet, which measures twenty-two inches in circumference, and weighs nearly twelve pounds. We have been shown by Den. Bass several large full pears, which grew on the estate of his son, Lewis Bass, Esq., some of which measured between eleven and twelve inches in circumference.

THE BATTLE AT MONTEREY. In this engagement the Mexican army numbered eleven thousand and the American six thousand. The siege lasted two days, when the Mexican commander, Gen. Ampudia, offered terms of capitulation. It was a severe contest. The Mexicans were driven from their cannons after they had charged them, when the pieces were turned and fired upon them. The loss on the American side is said to be over three hundred killed and about two hundred wounded. The Mexican loss in killed and wounded is supposed to be less than that of the Americans, owing principally to their breastworks. Gen. Taylor had his horse wounded, but was himself unhurt. An armistice to continue eight weeks was the result—this agreement will expire by the 20th of November, when hostilities will be again commenced if Mexico does not treat for peace.

The great organ for Trinity Church, New York, has just been completed and tested by the first organists in that city. Spectators were admitted by ticket, and thirteen thousand seven hundred were passed in to hear it.

The Constitutional Convention of New York have adopted the old provision requiring colored citizens to own a freehold of two hundred and fifty dollars to entitle them to the right of suffrage.

At a recent public meeting, in Boston, to take into consideration the increase of drunkenness, one of the city missionaries said he had lately visited a house containing forty-four families, all involved in such poverty and degradation as rum usually produces. He had a few hours previous witnessed companies of boys playing cards in a lumber yard, plentifully supplied with the common stimulus to evil! A truly lamentable state of public morals!

Thanksgiving is fast approaching, and who is fattening a turkey for our benefit on that festival. One will be expected, and justice done to it.

The artist, Gale, who so mysteriously disappeared from Boston a short time since, and as it was supposed had committed suicide, it is now reported, has been seen in the City of New York.

The Hon. S. G. Goodrich, better known to the reading world as Peter Parley, is about to visit Europe for a residence of some length of time, to superintend the reprint of his works.

The few retailers of spirituous liquors, in Boston, who had heretofore refused to dispense with the sale of it at their bars on the Sabbath, in pursuance of a law of the City of Boston, acquiesced in this glorious measure of the municipal authorities on Sunday last. Push the reform ahead.

The honorary degree of LL. D. has been conferred by the Columbian College, Washington City, on the Hon. Isaac Davis of this State, the democratic candidate for Governor.

The failure of the potato crop in Ireland had caused general and severe distress among the lower classes in that country. The people assemble in masses, post threatening notices, and demand food or work. It is stated that their condition must soon be deplorable. In this emergency, assistance will be required to an extent which must raise the value of agricultural produce all over the world.

Proofs of the great superiority of Dr. Wistar's Balsam pour in from all parts of the country. Nothing can equal its success in relieving human suffering.

Oxford, New Haven Co., Conn., Jan. 4, 1846.

Dear Sir—Having witnessed the effects of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry in the case of one of my neighbors, who has been for several years seriously afflicted with the phthisis, general pulmonary weakness, bleeding from the lungs, etc., I have been induced to ask you to send me some of the medicine, with a certificate of agency. My neighbor, referred to above, lately had a violent attack of bleeding from the lungs, and distress in breathing. He tried a bottle of the Wild Cherry, which has produced a most salutary and favorable effect. At his instance, and several others laboring under like complaints, I have been induced to make this request. By attending to the above immediately, you will oblige the afflicted, and all who are afflicted, Yours, etc., HENRY DUNHAM.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

LINES

On the Ladies' Anti-Slavery Fair, at Weymouth, Oct 6th, 7th and 8th.

The fire that warms their faithful hearts,
Still burns with steady flame;
The hope their sympathy imparts
Unceasing is the same.

And men look on and blush to see
Their boldest acts outdone
By woman's generous energy,
That noiseless presses on.

The sinews of the holy war
Their slender hands supply,
While slavery on her iron car
Recoils from woman's eye.

And men, who else would half despair,
Their efforts shall renew,
Reminded by this Annual Fair,
What woman's hand can do.

Fair scions from heroic veins,
Whose banner leads the van,
To free a growing land from chains
And guard the rights of man,

May he whose mandate worlds obey
His mighty powers reveal,
And drive all obstacles away
Till Victory crowns your zeal

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

TWAS YESTERDAY.

"Twas yesterday" 'tis familiar sound,
Heard of as idle breath;
Yet prophet-like, to all around,
It spoke of woe and death!

A mourner by the post it stands,
In mystic mantle of decay,
Shrouds in the night of years its hands,
And grasps all life away!

High from the boundless vault of Time
The stars of empire veer;
'Twas yesterday' they beam'd sublime,
The mightiest in their sphere!

'Twas yesterday' reveal'd to Fate
The rival crowns of centuries flown,
Shew'd where a Phantom sat in state
Upon the Caesars' throne!

Sceptre and robe were cast aside!
The ghastly bones stood bare;
The rust fed on the goods of pride,
The worm held council there.

No answer would the phantom give,
But to our constant prayer replied—
'Twas 'twould be said of all that live
'That 'yesterday' they died!

Where are the Grecian conquests now,
The triumphs of her hero?—
Dust rests on the Homeric brow,
Her genius is mute!

Where are the glorious hearts that fought
For freedom in the Pass of Gibe?
Gone—where the mightiest names are sought—
With yesterday of yore!

We hope—but what we hope the shroud
Wraps from our weeping sight;
We aim at stars, and clasp the cloud,—
Seek day, and find but night!

Ah! who with life's dread woes could cope,
If 'twere not for that Faith sublime,
Which sees the Ararat of Hope
Above the floods of Time?

What then is 'Yesterday'?—a key
To wisdom most divine!
It is the hall of Memory,
Where Fame's brief trophies shine!

The spiritual home of thoughts,
Where intellect immortal beams,
Which leads to thought its holiest wings,
Inspires the noblest themes!

A drop that mirrors forth a world,
Then mingle with the earth;
A star from Time's vast empire hurled,
Slow falling from its birth!

A presence with the sacred past,
To warn our spirits of delay,
Which saith,—'Proud man, to-day thou hast,
Use well thy little day!'

ANECDOTES.

"So, Sam, Santa Anna has gone to Mexico to fight us." "Not a bit of it—he's gone a-courting." "Gone a-courting you say? How do you make that out?" "Easy enough. Don't the papers say he has gone to see Sully (Saul)?"

An old couple visiting Paris with her son, was asked by a friend how old she was, to which she replied "twenty-eight." The friend, somewhat surprised, then asked the age of her son, to which the malicious youth rejoined, "I am one year older than my mother!"

An Irishman meeting a countryman, inquired his name. "Walsh," said the gentleman. "Walsh," responded Paddy, "are ye from Dublin?" I knew two old maids there of that name; was either of 'em your mother?"

It was stated a short time since, that a bill was thrust into the face of a President of a bank, when he killed the intruder on the spot. Out of this announcement the lovers of the horrible have manufactured a "terrible murder in a bank," but it turns out that the bill thrust into the face of a bank officer was that of a musquito!

"I had a gun once—so excellent a gun—why, the moment a thief came into the house, it went off, though never charged." "Amazing," How did it come so?" "The thief carried it off."

"So, here I am, between two tailors," cried a bean at a public table where a couple young tailor were seated, who had just begun business for themselves. "True," was the reply, "we are beginners, and can only afford to keep one goose between us."

QUINCY PATRIOT.

Dr. Wood's SARSAPARILLA AND WILD CHERRY BITTERS.

For the Permanent Removal of all such diseases as take their rise in an Impure Blood, Impaired Digestion, morbid state of the Liver and Stomach, Weakness of the Nervous System, and a disordered habit of Constitution generally.

DR. WOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters have already, by their substantial excellence, won a degree of public favor and patronage, which puts them beyond the need of recommendation. Being faithfully prepared of the most excellent materials, they can be fully confided in by all in need of a tonic, aperient, or alternative remedy. SARSAPARILLA takes a high rank among Physicians and all others in the list of curative agents, and it is this fact which has rendered it so deservedly popular over all other medicines of the day. In Dr. Wood's standard preparation, it is warranted to be found in great purity and strength, and gaining much by its union with the Wild Cherry, a tonic of the first order. This happy combination is the only one ever made of these articles, and is found as is on the best medical principles, and their virtues extracted by a rigid chemical analysis, experience has shown its unusual power and efficacy.

This preparation will be found on trial, to be a sure and speedy remedy for the diseases enumerated above. They purify the blood, secure regular digestion, promote a healthy action of the Liver and Stomach, and strengthen the nerves, at once securing HEALTH and vigor to the whole system. In all cases of despondency, arising from Indigestion or Nervous irritation, they have been used with remarkable success; nor are they less useful as a remedy for Headache, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, and a general prostration of the system. At the same time, it must be stated, that they are neither violent nor in any danger in their operation, securing as they do the desired end by a steady, regular and easy influence. Taken daily, in doses prescribed, they will be found to operate in that gentle and salutary manner, which is, in fact, their highest recommendation.

The following certificates, among many others which have been received from the most respectable sources, furnish satisfactory proof of the value and efficacy of this highly popular medicine.

Sandwich, Sept. 4, 1844.

Mr. E. THORNTON, JR.,
Dear Sir,—This is to certify, that my daughter has been troubled with Dyspepsia for a number of years, attended with almost constant headache and other distressing symptoms which accompany this disease. She visited Boston to avail herself of the advice of the justly celebrated physicians of that city, all to no purpose. By the solicitation of a friend, I was induced to purchase a bottle of Dr. Wood's SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters. Before taking one bottle she was relieved entirely of the headache, and after taking two or three bottles, the other symptoms entirely disappeared.

North Fairhaven, Long Plain, June 16, 1845.
Mr. E. THORNTON, JR.

Dear Sir,—My daughter has been for more than two years afflicted with a confirmed Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, together with a severe and constant headache. During this time, she was constantly attended by the most skillful and intelligent physicians, but with little or no relief, until we found the disease was rapidly taking the form of confirmed consumption. At this time, I determined to have recourse to Dr. Wood's SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters, as prepared by you, and it gives me the sincerest pleasure to state, that after the use of a few bottles, my daughter was happily restored to perfect health. I have the highest confidence in this medicine, and shall cheerfully recommend it to my friends.

Very truly yours, ANSEL WHITE.

The cure described in the above certificate of Mr. White, is by no means a singular one. There are hundreds who have been cured from a long and continued disease, by the use of this excellent and highly popular remedy. The proprietor recommends it to the public with the utmost confidence, for in all cases where it has been used, it has succeeded beyond the expectations of the patient or even his own. The care with which it is prepared, and the intrinsic excellence of its materials, should secure, and have secured for it, a character which it well deserves. The proprietor is constantly receiving orders for this medicine, and is confident that it will continue to be one of the most popular and useful remedies of the age.

MISCELLANY.

UNDER THE MAYSTICK.

There was a sound of happy voices and merry laughter in front of old Moses Callendar's cottage; for a party of gay young girls had gathered beneath the broad shadow of its roof-tree, laden with Maysticks, one of which they were trying to place over the low porch of the humble domicile.

Two or three ineffectual attempts were made, but at length one more agile than the rest gave a triumphant shout, the bough was firmly set, the group departed to perform the same important rite at their own respective dwellings. Song, and laugh, and jest passed from lip to lip; the quick retort, the lively repartee was heard, and ever and anon a burst of silvery glee, the infallible token of Bessie Callendar's presence.

"There goes the strange gentleman who is staying at the Golden Ball," exclaimed one of the number, as they leaned over the fence which separated the door-yard from the village road. "How handsome he is!" and just as she made the remark the object of it passed along, and touching his hat to the girls with habitual courtesy, went slowly on his way.

"He must have heard you, Laura," said one of the more staid and serious of the party; "you spoke so loud and he was very near."

"I can't help it if he did," was the reply. "It is extremely vexatious to be sure, but I dare say he was not offended at the compliment. I never knew a gentleman who was."

"Nor a lady either, I'll be bound!" laughed Bessie Callendar. "But really," she added, more seriously, "I do not think it would be a matter of any moment to this stranger. He looks very sad, and there is something in his melancholy smile, and in the sorrowful dignity of his manner, that awes me, giddy as I am. I am sure I could not be light and frivolous in his presence. I wonder who, what, or whence he is. I feel strangely interested in him."

"Indeed!" cried Minna Gove, with a tragicomic start, and mock gravity of voice and manner. "Well, then, if such is the case, I must give you my small stock of information concerning this great unknown. Last night, old Dame Hall called at our house with her baskets of roots and herbs and a well-seasoned dose of gossip. She had just come from the Golden Ball, where she had been pumping poor Mrs. Tenney about the new inmate. The gentleman is Mr. Kingsley from the South. He is a widower, with one child; a beautiful, intelligent boy she says, but sickly, and dreadfully deformed; and his father is journeying about to benefit the child's health, and to dissipate as much as possible, his own intense grief at the loss of his wife; for whom, though she has been dead three years, he still mourns deeply. They had been married but little more than a year, and were fondly attached to each other. Mr. Kingsley is a native of New England, and has made a great fortune at the South. Having no ties there now, it is thought, if the climate agree with the little boy's health, he will take up his residence at the North. So much, and nothing more do I know of his history."

"All that you have said but confirms and deepens my interest," replied Bessie, half laughing, and yet not merry at heart, for a tale of sorrow had ready claims upon her sympathy.

"Good morning, girls! Call this evening, and tell me who comes under your Maysticks!" So saying, after loitering a few moments over the dewy jonquils, pansies and daffodils that were blooming in the garden, she skipped gaily with her basket of May flowers into the cottage.

She had just finished her breakfast—for their walk had been before sunrise—and was wiping the coffee-cups, when a low rap was heard at the door. She ran to open it, and lo! within the porch, and directly under the Maystick stood Mr. Kingsley!—She was too much surprised at seeing him, however, to take notice of this circumstance; and, marvelling what his errand could be, timidly invited him to enter. He declined.

"I have a little sick boy at the inn," he said, "who is dearly fond of flowers. At this early season, it is difficult to find them; and I have had my eye, for a day or two, anxiously fixed upon your garden. I dare say you will dislike to part with your favorites, but I will gladly pay you almost any sum for the few that you can best spare."

"Oh, most cheerfully will I part with the fairest of them to please a little child, especially if he be sick," exclaimed Bessie, eagerly. "I have some pretty one in the house. Let me bring those first; or will you walk in, sir, and look at them?"

Mr. Kingsley followed her into the parlor; apartment humble and neat, with the broad window seats filled with blooming roses, pinks, and fragrant geraniums. Bessie called the sweetest flowers from each, twined among them some sprigs of wild arbutus, and then ran into the garden for white daffodils, and beautiful, large pansies. These she arranged with exquisite taste, and binding them up with a ribbon, placed them in a pretty moss basket she had constructed a few days before.

Mr. Kingsley was delighted with the gift—for gift Bessie would of course make it—and scarcely knew which was the most fresh and charming, the cottage maiden or her flowers.

"Could you see little Fred's face when this meets his eye, you would be repaid, I know," said Mr. Kingsley rising to take his leave.

"Is he too sick to leave the house?" asked

Bessie. "If he could come here and see my garden, perhaps it would give him pleasure."

"He is not quite well enough now, but as soon as he is better, I will certainly bring him; he would be charmed."

"I will gather a bouquet for him every morning," said Bessie, growing every minute more interested in the child—perhaps, also, in the father.

"Thank you! and I will call every morning and receive it," replied Mr. Kingsley, smiling more cheerfully than usual as he departed.

Bessie's interest in the stranger was now fully awakened, and she longed to see his little sick, unfortunate boy.

Every morning she was up with the lark, despatching her household affairs that she might have every thing in order when Mr. Kingsley called; for he was soon so familiar that he entered kitchen, pantry and washroom in search of her. She was the youngest child of a large family, all whom were married, and dispersed, save herself and one brother, who took care of the farm. She kept her father's house alone; and a tidier housekeeper was not found in the village.

Old Moses was a silent, broken down old man, who spent his whole time in spring and summer, fussing about the garden, pulling up weeds and training up shrubs and flowers. Bessie, accordingly, had the neatest and thriftiest garden in the village; a circumstance which she considered more than ever fortunate, since it had brought her so interesting an acquaintance.

At the end of a week, little Freddy was able to pay her a visit. He was never so happy in his life. Bessie contrived a thousand things to amuse him; gave him the sweetest bread and milk, and bread and butter he had ever tasted; brought him little rabbits and kittens to play with; drew him in his little wagon, (with the father to help) all about the green yard, among the bees and roses; sang her sweetest songs to him; and fairly made him forget all his weaknesses and pains.

Friendship was now fairly established between the Kingsleys and the Callendars. Little Freddy cried every day to visit the cottage, and every day went crying away; his tears pained his father's feelings so much that he begged Bessie to give the little fellow a home there. She consented with more readiness than she was willing should appear; for did not her conscious heart whisper that she would have consented to almost any arrangement that would bring Mr. Kingsley to the cottage often, and detain him long.

Thus Freddy's health improved, and under the care of his young nurse, was too apparent for the most unobserving to deny. And then he was so happy, so full of frolic and play, so changed from the little pale thing that his father was obliged to bring all the way from Mobile in his arms, that it did not seem possible that the two little forms could have been the same. Mr. Kingsley insisted that there was something magical in the atmosphere of the cottage; for not only was Bessie's voice and laugh the sweetest and most gleesome in the world, but little Fred caught the same tones, and he himself felt a lightness of heart, such as he had not believed it possible he could ever again experience.

He might well talk of a magical influence; what else could keep him a full hour every evening at the cottage, after Freddy was fast asleep? what else could have chased the gloom from his brow, and brightened his face with smiles? was he in love with Bessie Callendar? let us inquire?

He thought her charming the first time he ever saw her. Her face was so bright and happy, it seemed to penetrate, like sunshine, into his soul. As his acquaintance with her ripened, his interest gradually deepened. There was something so entirely new to him in the freshness and buoyancy of her spirits; something so cheerful in her presence; so inspiring in her laughter. Her very health seemed to charm him. He had been accustomed to the society of ladies whose attractions consisted in delicate languor and graceful indolence. Bessie was all vivacity and playfulness; she would charm the savageness out of a bear, with the heartiness of her mirth, and the gentleness of her demeanor. But of all things, her kindness of heart most deeply touched him. Could he see little Fred's face grow rosy with health and joy, and not bless the spirit that had so daintily ministered unto him? could he notice unfeelingly the mother-like kindness and delicacy with which she glided unto his darker musings, and stole away their sadness ere he was aware?

He compared her in his thoughts with the wife he had mourned so long. They were so unlike, he almost reproached himself with infidelity to the latter in allowing her image to be displaced from his thoughts by the gay and simple-hearted Bessie.—The one was all refinement, sensibility, and fragility; the other full of gay good-nature, and as fresh from Nature's school as the birds that sang upon her roof-tree. When he was young, happy, and light-hearted, he felt that he loved Mary most, sympathizing as she did with his deeper nature, and corresponding to his dreams of refined and educated woman; but now, when his heart had been saddened by her death, there was something in the very unlikeness of Bessie that soothed and cheered his spirit. He felt that she alone could make life appear to him as it did in earlier years; that with her beauty and innocence, and freshness around him, he could forget the sorrows in whose shadow he had dwelt so long, and lead a simpler and perhaps happier life than he had ever lived before.

One evening, after Bessie had lulled Freddy to sleep with his favorite ballad of the Children in the Woods, Mr. Kingsley, as was his custom, lingered still in the parlor. Minna Gove, who had been sitting there a while, rose to take her leave.

"Do you remember girls, the first time I ever saw you both?" said Mr. Kingsley, placing himself between them, and leading them out to the porch.

"On Monday morning, was it not?" asked Bessie.

"And what were you all so merry about?"

"Oh the Maystick! the Maystick!" cried Minna. "Dear me, Bessie, I never to this moment have thought to ask you who came under your Maystick. La! do see! there it hangs still, like a withered hope." She pointed up to the drooping and crispy bough above their heads.

"And what is the meaning of the Maystick?" inquired Mr. Kingsley. I have been absent from New England so long I have forgotten its rural customs. Say Bessie, what is this mystery?"

Bessie blushed deeply, but would not explain. "I appeal to Minna, then. What has come under the Maystick? to do with a young lady's fate?"

"Why bless me, Mr. Kingsley, have you passed under Bessie's so often, and not yet found out? why it has everything to do with her fate, for the first man who passes under it will surely be her husband. So tell us, Bessie, who is your fortunate swain?"

"You had better ask that question of me," said Mr. Kingsley, laughing, yet stealing a gentle glance at Bessie's too conscious face.

"What a silly thing to do!" said Bessie. "I will never be guilty of such foolishness again!"

"Very wise in you!" cried Minna, laughing, as she sprang out of the porch, and looked at her with a mischievous glance. "I dare say there will be no occasion for it!"

When she was out of sight, Mr. Kingsley took hold of Bessie's hand and drew her a few steps back, directly under the bough.

"It seems, then, that I have a claim on you, sweet Bessie. I came first under your Maystick, did I not? I believe in the omen, since it prophesies so clearly the very event my heart most ardently prays. Answer me under the Maystick, Bessie. Will you be my wife?"

The moon, golden and round, poured in its light through the vine leaves upon the cottage maiden's face. Tears were swimming in her eyes.

"Oh if I could make you happy, my friend; if I could be a good and faithful guardian to your little Freddy; if—"

"If you love me, dearest! I will hear no if but that!"

"I do love you!"

"Then both Freddy's and my happiness is confirmed; for do we not both love you better than anything else in life?"

The vows so tenderly plighted in the old porch, under the Maystick, were confirmed a few weeks later by marriage. Mr. Kingsley bought a fine farm in the neighborhood, to the cultivation of which he devoted his quiet years. He chose this life because he thought it the most congenial to Bessie's character; and he wished to preserve the freshness and simplicity that had at first charmed him. Though very rich, compared with their neighbors, Bessie still dressed in her simple muslins, and wore flowers instead of jewels on her bosom. Though younger, healthier, and better formed children surrounded her—children that had sprung from her own being—she watched over none more tenderly, she loved none more dearly than her poor deformed Freddy. She made his brief life a happy one, and when he died, his father laid his hand on her head and blessed her for her cares with such a blessing as never left her heart, or slumbered in her memory, through one day in her long and busy life.

Mr. Kingsley grew every year more in love with his joyous-hearted young bride, and forgot entirely the sorrows that once oppressed him. His garden is bright on every May-day with jonquils, daffodils, and pansies; and his children yearly renew the maple bough over the porch; so that daily, with an habitual remembrance of his good fortune, he often passes and repasses UNDER THE MAYSTICK.

A YANKEE IN A COAL SCREEN.

In order to load the coal boats on the Lehigh canal, a short but steep inclined plane of about one hundred and fifty feet in length, is made at the chute which runs from a station house on the side of the mountain to a large circular revolving screen; and to the loaded car is attached a rope which draws up an empty car, and, arrived at the screen, the lower end of the car is suddenly unbolts, and the coal is shot with great velocity into a hopper; this conveys it directly into the screen, which has three large chambers, through which coal of as many sizes is riddled out by scupper, into just as many boats, waiting for different descriptions of the article.

A few months since, a Yankee of the genuine breed, quite inquisitive, but more verdant than a Yankee should be, gained the station house, and gazed with wonder at the contrivances. He peculiarly admired the swiftness with which the loaded car descended and emptied its load and the velocity with which it returned to give place to another.

Shortly his attention was attracted by seeing a laborer mount one of the full cars about to make the descent.

"Going to slide?" inquired he.

"Yes, going to chute; won't you go?"

"Wal, I guess I'll stop a bit, and see you do it."

The car swiftly descended, and ere it reached the hopper, the passenger jumped off safely.

"Do you do that often?" inquired he of one of the laborers in the station house.

"Oh, yes, continually," was the glib answer, you know most all the boatmen are single men, and as they often have orders for family coal, we always send down a married man with every car of that kind, to let 'em know."

"Wal now, do tell," uttered the eastern man.

The more the Yankee looked at the apparatus, the more did he become convinced that it would be a great thing to go down the steep in that way—something that he could tell "to him."

Plucking up courage, he approached the superintendent.

"That beats sledding down hill, don't it?"

"I s'pose it does."

"You couldn't let a feller go down could you?"

"Why, do you think you can jump off in time?"

"Oh, yes, I'm reckoned considerable of a jumper—jumpin' does me good. I once jumped off a hay mow thirty feet high, and it made me so supple that I'm give in to be the best dancer in the hell township."

"Well, get on, and take care of yourself."

Suddenly the car moved off, and our friend found the speed so fearful, and the declivity so great, that he was forced to stoop down and grasp the sides of his vehicle for support. The place where the leapt off was reached, but the Yankee was not in the position; he had to hold on, and, running down a descent three times as steep as that which he had come, a sudden click shot the bolt, and with a violent force, out went the contents, Yankee included, into the hopper.

"Murder! get me out! stop the consarn!"

—shouted our hero, as he felt himself sliding down the hopper to the cylinder. "Murder! stop the consarn—I'll be killed!" But the motive of "the consarn" was water, which had no sympathy with those who pursue knowledge under difficulties, and those who were too distant and too much convulsed with laughter to yield assistance. Into the screen he slid, landing on the top, and as he felt himself revolving with the coal, he grasped the wires in desperation, to prevent himself revolving with the coal, he crasped the wires in desperation, to prevent himself from being rolled to the bottom—around the wheel he was, a plentiful shower of fine coal dust riddled from all the chambers.

He managed to open one eye, and saw with delight that the cylinder was only about fifteen feet in length, and he forced his way forward to the opening with desperation, but it was not altogether successful; another revolution of the wheel had yet to be borne, and the next time he reached the bottom he was shot out of the scupper into the boat beneath. To the screams of laughter with which his advent was hailed, our hero said not a word, but, getting out an handkerchief, rubbed the dust out of his eyes, and, surveying his torn apparel and bruised, battered, scratched and cut limbs, he raised his vein, to know as what quality of anthracite he had been delivered—when, smothering his remnant of a hat over his eyes, he stamped off muttering, "broken and screened by thunder."

EXAMINE YOUR BILLS. A merchant of Mississippi, during a day's business in which he had been crowded with customers, sold a saddle, of the value of forty dollars, but neglected to make the charge. Next day he missed the saddle and recollected the fact of the sale, but not the individual who bought it. After racking his memory some time to no purpose, he directed his clerk Jim to turn to his ledger, and read off the W's, then the S's, then the B's, and C's, and others letters in succession all to no purpose. Tired out with mental exercise, and as the readiest way of settling the difficulty, "Jim," said he, "charge a saddle to every one of the customers." This was accordingly done.

When the planter had got their cotton in and settling time came round, the bills were presented, and if occasionally one man more prudent than his neighbors went through the drudgery of examining a long list of sundries got by different members of the family, he might possibly discover a saddle which they had not got, or one more than they had got, and objecting to the item, it would be struck out—of course there was some mistake. When all the accounts had been settled up, "Well, Jim," said the store keeper, "how many paid you for that saddle?" Jim examined and reported thirty-one.

"Little enough," exclaimed his employer, "for the trouble we have had to find out who got it!"

LEGAL WEIGHT. The following table of the number of pounds allowed to the bushel of different grains, &c., may be a convenient reference to many:—

Wheat sixty, beans sixty, clover seed sixty, potatoes sixty, rye fifty-six, corn fifty-six, flaxseed fifty-six, onions 57, buckwheat seed fifty-two, salt fifty, barley fifty-eight, castor beans fifty-six, hempseed forty-four, timothy seed forty-five, oats twenty-four, brn twenty, blue grass seed fourteen, dried peaches thirty-three, dried apples twenty-two, rye coal seventy.

Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrophulous Eruptions, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pusules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impotence in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an injudicious use of Mercury. The completion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernand, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernand, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernand himself; consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions, or even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the incredulous invalid that no more has been said in its favor than its virtues safely warrant. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine.

To prevent imposition, each bill of directions accompanying the medicine will be signed by Dr. Fernand, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States.

J. K. FERNANDS, Indian Physician.

JOS. J. CLARK, Agent for New England States.

CERTIFICATES.

From W. Abercrombie of Quincy, Merchant Trader.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

SIR—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Inflammation of the Lungs, and Disease of the Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast enfeebled upon me the worst of all human diseases to which mortals are heir to—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines which were recommended, but from all of them I obtained not the least relief. About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.

WYMAN ABERCROMBIE.

Quincy, April 24, 1843.

From Ibrahim Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy Stone Bank.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark.

DEAR SIR—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum.

I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health as he has stated, has been on the decline—that he has had frequent times of raising blood to such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed convincing evidence that his health has been restored, and I have it from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great flatulency, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, a severe headache, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, &c.

I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,

IBRAHIM BARTLETT.

SERVANTS IN BOSTON. The late census of Boston has developed some curious facts. Only three hundred and forty families in Boston keep more than two domestics; and but four thousand and one families keep them at all; while fifteen thousand seven hundred and seventy-four families live in household independence, doing their own work entirely.

MAKING HIMSELF USEFUL. A student in Western Reserve College, who has been there in various stages of education for nine years, has supported himself by grafting, including, and otherwise introducing choice fruits, and has in fact, revolutionized and luxuriated all the town round. That man will make himself a living any where, and not be dependent upon charity for assistance.

TO NEWSPAPER READERS. Stop! Consider! Reflect upon what you are doing? Are you a subscriber, a borrower, or a grabber? Is the paper you hold in your hand yours, or is it the property of some person less able than you are to subscribe for it? If you are a borrower, or have stepped into some store or house for the purpose of reading it, let us entreat you to rid yourself of the heinous sin, and subscribe for it at once. Now is the time; don't delay, but come along at once.

For the Quincy Patriot.

SIEGE OF MONTEREY.

Though victory crowned our arms in this memorable conflict, and though the recollection of our unflinching courage and gallant daring of our citizen soldiery may awaken a thrill of pride in our bosoms—yet there are, connected with this contest, other memories which throw a shade of sadness over that scene of triumph; for, while a nation rejoices, the mother is mourning for her son—the child for his father, and the widow for the partner of her bosom. Three hundred American soldiers perished at that fatal day. The gloom which was created by this event is increased when we reflect that on the eve of peace, wanting only a painful appropriation by Congress, to accomplish so desirable an object, a Senator of Massachusetts—John Davis of Worcester, by the unmanly and dishonorable course of talking against time has caused the war to be perpetuated and the plains of Mexico to be watered with American blood. But, for him, the appropriation would have been made—the war would have been spared, and our standard would have spread its folds to the breeze over a nation at peace with the world. With this reflection our heart burns with indignation at him who for the miserable expectation of political advantage has condemned our soldiers to slaughter and their children to orphanage.—The law cannot reach the crime, but we trust he will receive his punishment from public opinion.

FOREIGN NEWS. The steamer Calcutta arrived at New York, on Friday, Oct. 23, rather a rough passage. She brings one hundred and ten passengers.

The failure of the potato crop again, has enhanced the price of all staples. Wheat flour, and Indian corn are held at exorbitant rates.

The high price of cotton is a subject of much remark. A slight advance had taken place in the market.

The price of coffee has also improved. Not only bread stuffs, cotton and coffee, but sugar and iron were in demand at advanced prices.

The food prospects of Ireland form the subject of much controversy. The fine weather for some weeks past had arrested in a measure the progress of the potato disease. Some riots had grown out of the famine in Ireland.

The rate of discount in the London money market remain unchanged, but the demand for money had improved, and the funds were dull and neglected. The state of Ireland, and the relations of Europe, arising out of the Spanish marriage, had had an extensive effect upon the market.

Ireland was in a state of famine, and great exertions were making for the relief of the people.

Spain is not alone in this matter. France and England are as much excited about it.

The papers announce the death of Thomas Clarkson, the well known philanthropist, at the age of eighty-six.

The steamship GREAT BRITAIN left Liverpool on the 22d ult., and ran ashore on the coast of Ireland nine and a half hours afterwards. All the passengers were saved, and it was at first thought the vessel might be drawn off at the next spring tides, but this was more doubtful at the last accounts.

RAILROAD CONFERENCE. The friends of the new and independent line of railroad from Boston to New York, via Woonsocket, held a convention at Newton, Upper Falls, on Tuesday, Oct. 27th, at ten o'clock, forenoon. The Engineers' Report upon the new survey will be made, and matters of the highest interest to the success of the enterprise, will be agitated. Some of the public spirited and sagacious among the Boston capitalists have recently taken an interest in this important route, and it is bound to go ahead.

GEORGIA. The election returns from Georgia leave it certain that the Congressional delegation elect is again equally divided—four each side,—as it was two years ago.

LICENSE TRIAL. At the Worcester Common Pleas, a liquor dealer of Boylston was committed to jail for ninety days, in default of paying the fines imposed upon him by the court, according to his sentence.

Snow. There was quite a snow storm in Utica, New York, on Saturday night last. Snow fell to the depth of two inches.

MEXICAN AFFAIRS. Santa Anna is at last firmly re-settled in his seat. He declines the Presidency, but takes command of the army.

His entry into the Capitol was made by a little management, a perfect triumph. Volleys of artillery, peals of bells and human voices, arches, shows, speeches, and inscriptions, welcomed him back as the deliverer of his country.

Santa Anna will probably rendezvous at the city of San Luis Potosi, and may wait in that neighborhood for Gen. Taylor.

Mexico is to have thirty thousand men ready for the field by the first of December, but it is doubtful whether she will be able to equip them.

The Mexican Government has issued requisitions upon the States for their contingents of troops, requiring them to appear at the city of Mexico, or at San Luis Potosi, within seventy days after the publication of the order.

All persons between the ages of sixteen and fifty are obliged, by a recent decree, to take arms when required to do so, as members of the National Guard, &c.

A letter from a United States naval officer, stationed off Tampico, states that the Mexicans were fortifying that place, so as to render it as impregnable as possible, and that no less than five thousand troops were supposed to be there.

News of the occupation of Santa Fe had reached the city of Mexico and caused much alarm, as its political importance is really great.

SHORT WORK. It has been decided by the Cabinet at Washington, to concentrate all the American army now in Mexico at a given point, push forward to the Capitol of that Republic and dictate terms of peace to the military rulers of that country from the Halls of Montezuma. Gen. Santa Anna will "count the cost" before he meets Gen. Taylor with his force of twenty thousand men and two hundred cannons.

UNITARIANISM IN BOSTON. The Boston Transcript mentions, that there are now in that city, twenty-five Unitarian clergymen regularly ordained or installed as pastors of churches, of which five are connected with the Ministry at Large, and one society is at present supplied with an unsettled minister; making in all twenty-six clergymen. The aggregate amount of salary paid to them is about forty-two thousand dollars annually. The probable value of churches and land is eight hundred thousand dollars. The society of which Theodore Parker is minister is not included above, as he does not acknowledge the inspiration and miracles of Christ.

Rev. Matthew Hale Smith was installed pastor of the Pilgrim Church and Society, at Tremont Temple, Boston, last Sunday evening.

A new coal mine has just been discovered at Valparaiso, Chile. The vein is four feet thick, and only fifteen feet from the surface of the earth. Mining operations will commence immediately.

The Buffalo papers head their news—"Received by lightning, printed by steam."

A caaract has been discovered on the river St. Louis, near the western extremity of Lake Superior, which has never been described by any geographer, and which is said to be second only to Niagara. The volume of water is very great, and the perpendicular height of the fall one hundred and fifty feet.

There has been a great fire in Columbus, Ga.,—about one hundred and fifty buildings destroyed,—loss estimated at one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

One great reason why truth is stranger than fiction, is because there is not half so much of it in the world.

The cotton crop of the South, according to a computation in the New Orleans Price Current, is 2,038,410 bales for 1845-6, against 2,204,503 bales for 1844-5.

The present Mayor of Baltimore (democrat) has been re-elected by a majority of one hundred and six votes. The City Council will stand in the first branch, eleven democrats and nine whigs; in the second branch, five to five.

Mr. HENRY S. FOX, late her Britannic Majesty's Plenipotentiary to the Government of the United States, recently died at his residence in Washington.

A Montreal paper mentions a case in which a young girl, very nearly lost her life in consequence of being "mesmerized," as it is called, by a lad of the same age with herself. She was recovered from the cataleptic state into which she had been thrown with the greatest difficulty, after having remained in it four or five days.

The bills of the City Bank of Providence are not received at the Suffolk Bank, in Boston.

It is stated by the correspondent of the N. Y. Herald, that the Emperor of Russia has instructed his Minister here, the Baron Bodisco, to have Major Tuchman surrendered over to the Russian government and his tender mercies, against her laws. The mildest fate of the Major, if given up, would be his transfer to the mines of Siberia. His crime is a participation in the Polish revolutionary war of '38.

A man, who has had twenty-six years' experience upon this coast, principally in the fishing business, states that the gale of the 19th was the most severe of any within his remembrance.

It is said that fifteen hundred patents have been granted in the United States, on improvements and modifications of Stoves.

The eagle, it is said, can fly at the rate of one hundred and fifty miles an hour; wild geese ninety miles; swallows, ninety-two miles; and the common crow at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour.

There are some men, who are never happy, when seated, unless their heels are higher than their heads. Only think, 'gentlemen,' how your wives would look in this position!

Short dresses, low shoes, and plaid stockings, it is said, are coming into fashion.

One of the most valuable beds of iron ore ever discovered, has been found in Dodge County, Wisconsin, and is said to yield ninety per cent. The deposit is said to be thirty feet thick.

A proposal is before the Montreal Board of Trade for the construction of the telegraph line from that city until it meets the American line at Whitehall or Saratoga.

The citizens of Yazoo, Mississippi, are making a charcoal road over the valley swamp at that place. Sixty hands-cutting timber will burn and spread the coal over two miles in thirty days, the embankments being already thrown up.

It is said that the only thing required in the eating of sausages is confidence.

A lad mesmerized a young girl in Montreal, recently. She remained in the cataleptic fit for five days, and was with great difficulty recovered.

Nathan Clifford, Esq. of Maine, has been appointed by the President, Attorney General of the United States, vice John Y. Mason, resigned.

The Miami Indians are about to comply with their engagements, and retire from their late territory in Iowa. No force will be necessary to secure their compliance.

THE HONORABLE MRS. J. B. HAYDEN has a pleasure in being able to recommend this medicine as the best remedy for curing coughs, colds, sore throat, asthma, and all affections of the lungs. From a long personal acquaintance with Dr. Jayne, we know that he is no quack, and his medicines are not nostrums of the modern cry, but are the result of his long experience as a practicing physician, and the expense of great labor.—Hartford (Ct.) Review.

Beware of Counterfeits and Imitations. The unparalleled and astonishing efficacy of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, in all the diseases for which it is recommended, curing many cases after the skill of the best physicians was unavailing, has effected a large and increasing demand for it. This fact has caused several unprincipled counterfeiters and imitators to palm off spurious mixtures, of similar name and appearance, for the genuine Balsam. Some are called "Wistar's," "Balsam of Wild Cherry," "Spikeweed," "Wild Cherry," "Corey's," etc. Another, "Wester's Balsam of Wild Cherry," misspelling the name, and forging certificates to resemble those of the real character of Dr. Wistar's "Balsam of Wild Cherry" is the only genuine. The rest merely imitate the name of the original, while they possess none of its virtues.

Look well to the marks of the Genuine. The name is not put up in bottles, but in the words "Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, Philadelphia," blown in the glass; each bottle bearing a label on the front with the signature of

H. WISTAR, M.D.

This will be enveloped herewith with a new wrapper; copyright secured, 1844, on which will always appear the written signature of "H. WISTAR."

NOTICE.—The present times are inadequate to accommodate my numerous retinue of customers. On the 1st of February next, I shall endeavor to erect a "Suppering Parlor," sufficiently large to accommodate my friends and numerous customers. "Large as the present house is, it is not sufficiently large," "Spacious, but not sufficiently spacious," "Brilliant in appearance, it is not sufficiently brilliant." This Gigantic House, the Brilliant Establishment is to take up place. These names, and being applied to my establishment by those that are acquainted with the real character of Oak Hall, such as "a Superior Hall," "a Princely Warehouse," "a vast Trading Room," "a Watchmen Establishment," "a Theatre of Unbounded Trade," "a Stupendous Scheme," "an Extensive Market," "a Triumphant Achievement," "a Sphere of Extraordinary Operations," "an Unapproachable Wonder," "such names will probably hurt to my new construction when completed. I ought not to undertake to confine the vast ocean in the limits of our pond, on Boston Common, as to carry on my large trade within the walls of these present limits. The public are aware that my triumphal state are not overrated. The trade at my extensive Warehouses may be compared to a large monster, whose bulk and mighty stature have become so great that it requires a larger sphere for its present movements. This Warehouse, erected in 1841, has stood unrivaled in the metropolis for extent and magnitude, and yet it is far from being equal to the extent of my business trading operations. So liberal a patronage must have a larger house for the unfeigned movements of its cargoes from. An Establishment far surpassing the present one is absolutely necessary, and one is shortly to be erected that will surprise and delight all interested in my welfare.

Notice. To the Honorable Judge of the Court of Probate for the County of Norfolk.

THE petition of ANN TAYLOR, Guardian to Ann Adams Taylor and George Taylor, of Quincy, in said County, minor children of THOMAS TAYLOR, late of said Quincy, gentleman, deceased, respectfully represents, that said minors are seized of real estate consisting of one undivided third part of about one half an acre of land, situated upon "Pine Neck," near the Neponset Bridge, in said Quincy, of the value of $100, and that it would be for the benefit of said minors to have their interest therein sold, and the proceeds thereof put out and secured to them on interest, for the following reasons, viz: that the interest upon the money for which said estate may be sold will be more than the income from the estate, and that the other part owners are about to sell their right in the same. And that the persons interested in the estate of said minors as next of kin, promising heirs or otherwise are Ann Taylor, Edmund B. Taylor of said Quincy, Thomas Taylor, Charles Taylor of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, and Henry Taylor of Dorchester, in said County of Norfolk. Notice.

To the Honorable Judge of the Court of Probate for the County of Norfolk.

THE petition of ANN TAYLOR, Guardian to Ann Adams Taylor and George Taylor, of Quincy, in said County, minor children of THOMAS TAYLOR, late of said Quincy, gentleman, deceased, respectfully represents, that said minors are seized of real estate consisting of one undivided third part of one-half an acre of land, situated upon "Pine Neck," near the Neponset Bridge, in said Quincy, of the value of $100, and that it would be for the benefit of said minors to have their interest therein sold, and the proceeds thereof put out and secured to them on interest, for the following reasons, viz: that the interest upon the money for which said estate may be sold will be more than the income from the estate, and that the other part owners are about to sell their right in the same. And that the persons interested in the estate of said minors are next of kin, presumptive heirs or otherwise are Ann Taylor, Edmund B. Taylor of said Quincy, Thomas Taylor, Charles Taylor of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, and Henry Taylor of Dorchester, in said County of Norfolk. The said Guardian therefore prays that she may be licensed and empowered to sell and convey the said real estate.

OPPOSITE THE MARLBORO' HOTEL, BOSTON.

THE proprietors of this Establishment invite the public to examine one of the most perfect and extensive collections of SHAWLS ever exhibited and surpassed by None in this Country.

This immense Stock, amounting to thousands of dollars in value, and ranging in prices from a Scotch Plaid at $1.50 to an Indian Camde Hair at a Thousand dollars, was imported expressly for this Establishment, selected by the senior partner, who for the last eighteen years, has given this difficult and important branch of the business, his particular attention, and whose familiarity and constant communication with the principal manufacturers in England, Scotland and France,

enables them at all seasons to offer the latest and choicest patterns, combined with fabrics, which for durability and comfort they can recommend with confidence.

THE ADVANTAGES

IN BUYING AT THIS ESTABLISHMENT, must be apparent to every one—namely from the great variety from which to select—but importing the goods ourselves, we save the profit which the retailer usually pays the importer, and from the immense amount of our sales, we can afford to DO SELL A SINGLE SHAWL, at as low a rate as any "down town" importer will sell a case. In our stock may be found

300 Cashmere Long Shawls, all wool, at $5.00

Arrival of Fall and Winter Goods.

JOHN DINEGAN, MERCHANT TAILOR, School Street, Quincy,

HAS the pleasure to announce the arrival of an IMMENSE and VARIED ASSORTMENT of very heavy BROADCLOTHS, of

English, French and German Manufacture,

that will be suitable for

OVERCOATS, FROCKS OR SACKS,

which he will sell either by the piece or yard, or MAKE INTO GARMENTS at prices

Considerably Less

than he has ever offered to his customers before. Those in want of CLOTHING, at FAIR PRICES, would do well to give him an early call, as the various but SUPERIOR character of his present assortment of offers peculiar advantages for judicious selection. He would therefore call the attention of the public to the following list of prices:

For an Overcoat made of extra heavy English, French or German Beaver, well lined and wadded throughout, $12.00
Do. double weaved and faced with Silk Velvet, 16.00
Do. made of any color or style that may be desired, 18.00 to 24.00
Frock Coats or loose Sacks will vary from, 4.50 to 10.00

In fact, he can get up as good a suit of Clothes for eighteen dollars as his neighbors in the city charge from twenty to twenty-five dollars for.

VESTINGS.

His Assortment of Vestings must be seen to be appreciated. It consists of VELVETS, Plain and Figured: SATINS; CASHMERES of every style and pattern, and an endless variety of VALENCIAS.

He has also received a good assortment of SATINETTS that will be sold, or made to order, on the most reasonable terms. He has a first rate article, Double Milled, at 37 1/2 cents the yard, that will do for Men's or Boys' COATS or PANTS.

To the Public.

Sanctioned by public approbation after a trial of years, and encouraged during that time with steady, progressive and increasing trade, satisfactorily testifies that I have merited support. The increase of business and the position I occupy is not the result of sudden caprice but of steady advancement.

My Goods are all marked at the VERY LOWEST notch, and there shall be no deviation from them, as I have but ONE PRICE.

I shall continue to have my Garments made by the best of Journeymen Tailors, therefore I shall be able to let my customers have their Garments made in a style that will wear a comparison with those made in the most celebrated establishments in the city, and nearly one half cheaper, as all my garments are cut by myself; they are therefore Warranted to fit and give perfect satisfaction.

Trimnings of every description, very cheap.

POETRY.

MY OLD HAT

My poor old hat! my poor old hat!
I see that you are going,
But, when I shall another get,
I'm sure there is no knowing

It grieves me much, my poor old "tile,"
Old servant as thou art,
To know that in a little while
We must forever part.

'Tis true we've parted oft before,
When Boreas bent on fun,
Has made me wodge a mile or more
As fast as I could run;

Then like a drunken loafer, thou
Wouldst bring up in the gutter,
And like a hog be drenched with slough,
Which made me swear and mutter.

And then—O, it was such a blow—
Some wag with saucy chat,
Would nudge his chin, "I say, Jo,
Look, what a shocking hat!"

Well—never mind, old cover scone,
'Tis useless to repine,
For though I nearly lost thee once
Old hat—thou yet art mine.

You've served me well, you've served me long,
Through sunshine, rain, and thunder,
And I'll extol thy name in song,
When we are torn asunder.

Couldst thou, old crony, peep below
The crust which thou dost shelter,
You'd see thoughts hopping to and fro,
In wildest helter-skelter.

Thoughts new and old, are stowed away
In every nook and cranny—
Of what to do, while 'er's day
I'm plagued to death for money.

My poor old hat! ah, did I see
How I could raise the pelt
To get one that would wear like thee,
I'd put you on the shelf.

But no, old friend, I cannot raise
The wind—I know I can't;
And so old hat, I'll sing thy praise,
While I a new one want.

Come then, old hat; thou yet art bright,
Thou yet will keep from harm
The head of a poor, luckless wight,
Through many a pelting storm.

"I STRIKE MY FLAG!"
I strike not to a scepter king—
A man of mortal breath—
A weak, impetuous, guilty thing,
I strike to thee, O Death!

I strike that flag, which in the fight
The lopes of millions hailed,
That flag, which threw its meteor light
Where England's lion quailed.

I strike to thee, whose mandates fall
Alike on king and slave,
Whose livery is the shroud and pall,
And palace court, the grave.

Thy captive crowd the caverned earth,
They fill the rolling sea,
From court and camp, the wave and hearth,
All, all have bowed to thee

But thou, stern Death, must yet resign
Thy scepter o'er this dust;
The Power that makes the mortal thine,
Will yet demand his trust.

That mighty voice shall reach this ear,
Beneath the grave's cold sod,
This form, these features re-appear
In life before thy God.

ANECDOTES.

A clergyman of a country village desired his clerk to give notice that there would be no service in the afternoon, as he was going to officiate for another clergyman. The clerk, as soon as the sermon was ended, rose up, with due solemnity, and called out—"I am desired to give notice that there will be no service this afternoon, as Mr. L. is going a fishing with another clergyman." Mr. L., of course corrected this awkward, yet amusing blunder.

A physician was remarkable for slovenliness of person and his dislike to muffs. At breakfast one morning, a plate of muffs being introduced, he grew outrageous, and vehemently exclaimed—"Take away the muffs!" "No, no," said a wit present, seizing the plate, and looking significantly at the doctor, "take away the regalia!"

"Has Mr. Breed got any cedar shingles in his wharf?" inquired a little urchin at the counting room door. "Yes, he has." "Well, I want to get two cents' worth, to make a sled."

A Connecticut Jonathan, in taking a walk with his dearest, came to a toll-bridge, when he suddenly stopped after paying his toll, which was one cent—"Come, Sukey, you must pay your own toll, for just as like as not I shan't have you after all."

Bulwer says, "there is nearly always something of nature's own gentility in very young women, except when they get together and fall a giggling."

A singular, quick-witted old soldier of the last war was one afternoon standing at the door of his residence, when a demure-looking personage, who was distributing tracts around the neighborhood, accosted him thus, "can I leave tracts here?" The old soldier eyed him very sharply for a moment, and then drawing himself up to his full height, replied: "Yes, d—n a quick! 'till hee heels towards the house."

A fellow was caught running off with a fisherman's net, which he wrapped around him, and plead crazy. "You look like being crazy," said the officer. "So I am—don't you see I'm in acute!" (insane) The officer let him slide.

DR. WOOD'S SARSAPARILLA AND WILD CHERRY BITTERS.

For the Permanent Removal of all such diseases as take their rise in an Impure Blood, Impaired Digestion, morbid state of the Liver and Stomach, Weakness of the Nervous System, and a disordered habit of Constitution generally.

DR. WOOD'S SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters have already, by their substantial excellence, won a degree of public favor and patronage, which puts them beyond the need of recommendation. Being faithfully prepared of the most excellent materials, they can be fully confided in by all in need of a tonic, aperient or alterative remedy. SARSAPARILLA takes a high rank among Physicians and all others in the list of curative agents, and it is this fact which has rendered it so deservedly popular over all other medicines of the day. In Dr. Wood's standard preparation, it is warranted to be found in great purity and strength, and gaining much by its union with the Wild Cherry, a tonic of the first order. This happy combination is the only one ever made of these articles, and founded as it is on the best medical principles, and their virtues, it is a powerful and efficient remedy, experience has shown its unusual power and efficacy.

This preparation will be found on trial, to be a sure and speedy remedy for the diseases enumerated above. They purify the blood, secure regular digestion, promote a healthy action of the Liver and Stomach, and strengthen the nerves, at once securing its purity and vigor to the whole system. In all cases of dyspepsia, arising from indigestion or nervous irritation, they have been used with remarkable success; nor are they less useful as a remedy for Headache, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, and a general prostration of the system. At the same time, it must be stated, that they are equally useful in all dangerous diseases, as in the ordinary, securing as they do the desired end by a steady, regular and easy influence. Taken daily, in doses prescribed, they will be found to operate in a gentle and salutary manner, which is, in fact, their highest recommendation.

Ma. E. THOMPSON, Jr.,
Dear Sir:—This is to certify, that my daughter has been troubled with Dyspepsia for a number of years, attended with almost constant headache and other distressing symptoms which accompany this disease. She visited Boston to avail herself of the advice of the justly celebrated physicians of that city, all to no purpose. By the solicitation of a friend, I procured a bottle of Dr. Wood's SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters. Before taking one bottle she was relieved entirely of the headache, and after taking two or three bottles, the other symptoms entirely disappeared.
N. B. GIBBS,

North Fairhaven, Long Plain, June 16, 1845.
Ma. E. THOMPSON, Jr.,

Dear Sir:—My daughter has been for more than two years afflicted with a confirmed Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint, together with a severe and constant headache. During this time, she was constantly attended by the most skillful and intelligent physicians, but with little or no relief, until we found the disease was rapidly taking the form of confirmed consumption. At this time, I determined to have recourse to Dr. Wood's SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters, and prepared by you, and it gives me the sincerest pleasure to state, that after the use of a few bottles, my daughter was happily restored to perfect health. I have the highest confidence in this medicine, and shall cheerfully recommend it to my friends.
Very truly yours, ANSEL WHITE.

The cure described in the above certificate of Mr. White, is by no means a singular one. There are hundreds who have been cured from the most acute or long continued disease, by the use of this excellent and highly popular remedy. The proprietor recommends it to the public with the utmost confidence, for in all cases where it has had a fair trial, it has succeeded beyond the expectations of the patient or even his own. The care with which it is prepared, and the intrinsic excellence of its materials, should secure, and have secured for it, a character which it well deserves. The prejudice usually existing against advertised medicines, would not be merited if the above trial on this. The wonderful cures it has performed, and the acknowledged celebrity of its principal constituents, should at once recommend it to the public favor.

DR. FERNANDS' Vegetable Indian Arcanum,

FOR THE CURE OF Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pusules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impudence in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an impudic use of Mercury. The completion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernand, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernand, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but for its safe and its directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernand himself, and consequently it is collected by his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. POETRY.

THEY LIE BEYOND!

"The milk and the honey lie beyond this wilderness world."

Look round thee! Is it bubble Fame,
Or, to thy grosser shame,
Is yellow Gold thy one desire?
For pleasure is thy soul a fire?
Earth cheats thy expectation fond;
Thy treasures lie beyond;
Those riches glut Love's wondrous mine;
In chrysolites they flash and shine;
Haste, beggar! make them thine;
Then, if Religion's pilgrim-child,
Thou journeyest through a desert, wild,
Thou hast possessions lodged afar
Above the lean and stormy sky,
In worlds ne'er scanned by mortal eye,
Where ends the flight of sun and star,
Thou may'st believe, but cannot know
Poor captive, led by sin below—
How vast his joy who gains that gold,
Or losing, how intense the woe!
Faith, only, may the prize unfold;
In vision free 'tis only seen;
And many a weary step between;
And sickness, sorrow, toiling years,
And sore temptations, sighs and tears,
And pains and falling breath,
And the last tyrant Death—
They lie beyond!

Look round thee! See the sordid slaves
That creep to unremembered graves;
That eat and sleep and buy and sell—
To enrich a foolish heir.
To them is Time but blank despair,
Eternity a hell.
What is their treasure? Wealth that God
Makes and unmake—a gilded toy
That in his hand becomes a rod
With which the triflers to destroy.
Where lie their treasures? Ask the Deeps
That suck them by whole cargoes down;
Ask Fire, that travels through the heaps
And in one night licks up a town.
Wouldst be like them, to vegetate,
A creeping thing, a monied clod,
And never rise to know how great
May be a Man, the work of God?
Wouldst be like them? O rather sleep
On dunghills, and thy bitter crust
Beg of the cruel, aye, and weep
For very anguish, till the dust Shall hide thee. If recorded "Just,"
When all is past,
And thou art last
Hast cross'd in peace, the cold cold river,
All expectation, fond,
Exceeding—thine the wealth forever
That lies beyond!

WE MISS THEE.

We miss thee in the even time
Beside the household hearth,
When voices swell in music chime,
The gay glad notes of mirth.

We miss thee when in humble prayer,
We lowly bend the knee,
Oh! far off, gentle wanderer, there
How much our hearts miss thee.

We miss thee when the summer flowers
Are peeping hill and dale,
While cooing birds in rosy bowers
Their tales of fondness tell.

And when the snow flakes whitely gleam,
And flowers and birds are gone,
Like the sweet fancies of a dream,
With morning brightness flown;

We miss thee ever from our side;
Yet long, long years have past
Since thou, companion, friend and guide
Wert loving with us last.

Thou' sorrow's dim and dreary pall
Hath fallen dark o'er me,
Yet faithful memory gleams thro' all,
And whispers—we miss thee.

GIVE AND TAKE.

"Gin me a kiss, my charming Sal,
A lover said to blue eyed girl,
"I shan't," says she, "you lazy elf,
Screw up your lips and help yourself!"

ANECDOTES.

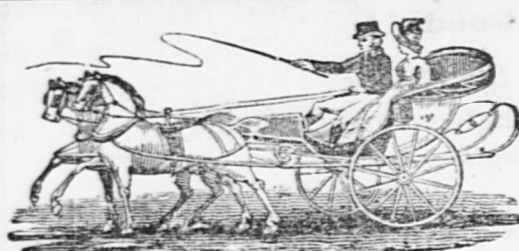

"Times are so hard in England," said a manufacturer to his London agent, "that we have men there who will get up the inside of a watch for eighteen shillings." "Poh, don't talk of that in London—why, we have boys here who will get up the inside of a chimney for sixpence!"

In giving geography lessons, a schoolmaster down east asked a boy, "What State do you live in?" To which the boy drawled through his nose in reply, "A state of sin and misery!"

"I want a simile for love." "Simile? why—love is like." "Like what?" "The measles, to be sure." "The measles?" "Ay—it comes but once, and is generally caught when young." "I've seen old people catch it." "There it is like the measles again, for when caught by the old, it always goes hard, and is generally hopeless."

An independent gentleman was illustrating Mrs. Trollope after dinner, at the house of a Baltimore restaurateur. He sat poring over the paper, with his understanding on the table. "Waiter, pig's feet," cried a guest. "There they are, sir," replied the waiter, pointing to the table of the gentleman with the newspaper.

"Job printing!" exclaimed an old woman, the other day, as she peeped over her spectacles at the advertisements of a newspaper. "Poor Job! they've kept him printing, week after week, ever since I first learnt to read; and if he wasn't the most patient man that ever was, he never could have stood it so long, no how."

T. Kellogg

WOULD inform the public that he has moved his place of business to a Chaise manufacturing establishment formerly occupied by Mr. J. F. DR. FERNANDS'

Vegetable Indian Arcanum,

Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pustules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Imprudences in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an injudicious use of Mercury. The complexion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernands, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernands, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernands himself; consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions or even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the incredulous invalid that no more has been said in its favor than its virtues safely warrant. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine.

To prevent imposition, each bill of directions accompanying the medicine will be signed by J. K. Fernands, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States.

J. K. FERNANDS, Indian Physician.
JOS. J. CLARK, Agent for New England States.

CERTIFICATES.

From W. Abercrombie of Quincy, Merchant Trader.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernands' Medicine: Sir—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Inflammation of the Lungs, and Disease of the Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast en-tailing upon me the worst of all human diseases to which mortals are heir to—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines which were recommended, but from all of them I obtained not the least relief. About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.

Quincy, April 3d, 1843.

From Ibrahim Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy State Bank.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark.

DEAR SIR:—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum. I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health as he has stated, his cold, his decline—that he has had frequent turns of raising blood, to such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed convincing evidence that his health has been restored, and I have it from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great flatulency, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, &c. I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,

IBRAHIM BARTLETT.

MISCELLANY.

THE TEMPTATION OF WASHINGTON.

BY GEORGE LIPPARD.

There are days in winter when the air is very soft and balmy as the early days of summer, when, in fact, that glad maiden May seems to blow her warm breath in the grim face of February, until the rough old warrior laughs again.

It was on a day like this that the morning sunshine was streaming over a high rock that frowned there, far above the Wissahikon.

A high rock, attainable by a long, winding path, fenced in by the trunks of giant pines, whose boughs, in the coldest day in winter, form a canopy overhead.

The rock is covered with a carpet of evergreen moss.

And near this nook—this chamber in the forest, for it was nothing less—sat an old man, separated from it by the trunks of the pines, whose boughs concealed his form.

That old man had come here, alone, to think over his two sons, now freezing at Valley Forge—for, though the father was a Tory, yet his children were Continentals. He was a well-meaning man, but some half-crazy idea about the Divine Right of the British Pope, George the third, to rule this Continent, and murder and burn as he pleased—lurked in his brain, and kept him back from the camp of Washington.

And now, in this bright morning in February, he had come here, alone, to think the matter over.

And while he was pondering this deep matter over whether George the Pope or George the Rebel was in the right—he heard the tramp of a war-steed not far off, and, looking between the trunks of the pines, he saw a man, of noble presence, dismount from his gray horse, and then advance into the quiet nooks of moss-carpeted rocks, encircled by giant pines.

And now, leaving that aged Tory, to look upon this man for himself, let us look on him, with our own eyes.

As he comes through those thick boughs, you behold a man, more than six feet high, with his kingly form enveloped in a coarse grey overcoat; a chapeau on his bold forehead—and beneath the skirts of that great coat, you may see the military boots and the end of a scabbard.

And who is this man of kingly presence, who comes here alone, to pace this moss-covered rock, with dropped head and folded arms?

Come, my friends, and look upon him—let me show you—not this figure of mist and frost-work, which some historians have called Washington—but Washington, the living, throbbing, flesh and blood Washington!—Yes, WASHINGTON THE MAN.

Look upon him, as he paces that moss-covered rock—see that eye burn, that muscular chest heave under the folded arms.

Ah, he is thinking Valley Forge! Of the bloody foot-prints in the snow—of those three hideous figures that sit down in the huts of Valley Forge together—Disease, and Starvation, and Nakedness.

Look, as those dark thoughts crowd on his soul, he falls on his knees, he prays the God of heaven to take his life, as an offering for the freedom of his native land!

And as that prayer stumbles the wild woods, that grey coat falls open, and discloses the blue and gold uniform—the epaulette and the sword-hilt.

Then the agony of that man, praying there in the silent woods—praying for his country, now bleeding in her chains—speaks out, in the flashing of the eye, in the beaded sweat, dripping from the brow!

Ah, kings of the world, planning so coolly your schemes of murder, come here, and look at George Washington, as he offers his life a sacrifice for his country!

Ah, George of England, British Pope, and good-natured Idiot that you are, now counting, in your royal halls, how many more men it will take to murder a few thousand peaceful farmers, and make a nation drink your tea, come here to this rock of the Wissahikon, and see, King and Pope as you are, George Washington in council with his God!

My friends, I can never think of that man in the wilds of Wissahikon—praying there, alone; praying for his country, with the deep agony in his heart and on his brow, without also thinking of that dark night in Gethsemane, when the blood drops started from the brow of Jesus, the blessed Redeemer, as he plead for the salvation of the world!

Now look! As Washington kneels there, on that moss-covered rock, from those green boughs steps forth another form—tall as his own—clad in a coarse grey coat, with the boots and scabbard seen below its skirts, with the chapeau upon his brow.

The stranger emerges from the boughs—stands there unperceived, gazing in silence upon the kneeling warrior.

A moment passes!

Look! Washington has risen to his feet—he confronts the stranger.

Now, as that stranger, with a slight bow, uncovers his forehead, tell me, did you ever see a stronger, stranger resemblance between men than between these two, who now confront each other in silence, under shade of those dark pines?

The same height, breadth of chest, sinewy limbs, nay, almost the same faces—save that the face of the stranger, sharper in outline, lacks that calm consciousness of a great soul which stamps the countenance of Washington.

That resemblance is most strange—their muscular forms are clad in the same coarse grey coat—their costume is alike—yet hold—

The stranger throws open his overcoat—you behold that bannan's dress, that British uniform, flashing with gold and stars! Washington starts back, and lays his hand upon his sword.

And as these two men, so strangely alike, meet there by accident, under that canopy of boughs—one wandering from Valley Forge, one from Philadelphia—let me tell you at once, that the stranger is none other than the Master Butcher of the Idiot-king—Sir William Howe. Yes, there they meet, the one the impersonation of freedom—the other the insinuated legacy of a Tyrant's Will!

We will listen to their conversation; it is brief but important.

For a moment, the General stood spell-bound before the man whom he had crossed the ocean to entrap, and bring home; the Rebel, who had lifted his hand against the Right Divine of the British Pope! To that British General there was something awful about the soldier who could talk with his God as Washington had talked a moment ago.

"I cannot be mistaken," at last said Sir William Howe; "I behold before me the chieftain of the Rebel army, Mister Washington?"

Washington coldly bowed his head.

"Then this is a happy hour! For we together can give peace and freedom to this land!"

At this word Washington started with surprise—advanced a step—and then exclaimed—

"And who, sir, are you that thus boldly promises peace and freedom to my country?"

"The commander of his Majesty's forces in America!" said Howe, advancing that wood-hidden rock towards Washington. "And oh, sir, let me tell you that the king, my master, has heard of your virtues, which alone dignify the revolt with the name of a war, and it is to you he looks for the termination of this most disastrous contest."

Then Washington, whose pulse had never quickened before all the panoply of British arms, felt his heart flutter in his bosom, as that great bon was before his eyes—peace and freedom to his native land!

"Yes," continued Howe, advancing another step, "my king looks to you for the termination of this unnatural war. Let rebellion once be crushed—let the royal name be fully established by your influences, and then, sir, behold the gratitude of King George to Mister Washington."

As he spoke, he placed in the hands of Washington a massive parchment—sealed with the broad seal of England, signed with the manual of King George.

Washington took the parchment—opened it—read—his face did not change a muscle.

And yet that parchment named Mister George Washington "GEORGE DUKE OF WASHINGTON OF MOUNT VERNON, our well beloved servant, Viceroy of America!"

Here was a boon for the Virginia planter—here was a title and a power for the young man, who was one day struggling for his life away there amid floating ice on the dark Allegheny.

For a moment, the face of Washington was buried in that parchment, and then, in a low, deep voice, he spoke—

"I have been thinking," of the ten thousand brave men who have been massacred in this quarrel. I have been thinking of the dead of Bunker Hill—Lexington—Quebec—Trenton—Yes, the dead of Saratoga—Brandywine—German town—"

"And your king," continued Washington, with a look and tone that would have cut into a heart of marble, "would have me barter the bones of the dead for a ribbon and a title!"

And then—while Howe shrunk covering back—that Virginia planter, Washington, crushed that parchment into the sod, with the heel of his warrior boot—Yes, trampled that title, that royal name, into one mass of rags and dust.

"That is my answer to your king!"

And then he stood with scorn on his brow, and in his eye, his outstretched arm pointing to the minion of King George.

Was 't that a picture for the pencil of an angel? And now, that British General, recovering from his first surprise, grew red as his uniform with rage.

"Your head," he gasped, clinching his hand, "your head will yet redder the Traitor's block!"

Then Washington's hand sought his sword—then his fierce spirit awoke within him—it was his first impulse to strike that braggart quivering into the dust.

But in a moment he grew calm.

"Yours is a good and great king," he said, with his usual stern tone. "At first he is determined to sweep a whole Continent with but five thousand men, but he soon finds that his five thousand men must swell to twenty-five thousand before he can even begin his work of murder. Then he sacrifices his own subjects by thousands—and butchers peaceful farmers by tens of thousands—and yet his march of victory is not even begun. Then if he conquers the capital city of the Continent, victory is sure! Behold! the city is in his grasp, yet still the hosts of freedom defy him, even from the huts of Valley Forge!"

"And now, as a last resource, your king comes to the man whose head yesterday was sought, with a high reward, to grace the gates of London—he offers that Rebel a Dukedom—" a vice regal sceptre! And yet that Rebel tramples the Dukedom into the dust—that Rebel crushes into atoms the name of such a king."

Ah, never Spaniel skulked from the kick of his master, as that General Howe cringed away from the presence of Washington—mounted his horse—was gone!

One word with regard to the aged Tory, who beheld this scene from yonder bushes with alternate wonder, admiration, and fear.

That Tory went home—"I have seen George Washington at prayer," he said to his wife: "the man who can trample on the name of a king, as he did—pray to God as he prayed, that man cannot be a Rebel or a bad man. Tomorrow, I will join my sons at Valley Forge."

—Saturday Courier.

HOW TO AVOID WRINKLES, AND NEVER TO GROW UGLY.—I saw the lady of the house; and as I liked the master, I don't know but I liked the mistress more. Such a dear kind-hearted creature; and so good-looking; one of the sort that would never grow old, or look ugly, even if she were to live to the age of Methuselah. And her fondness for her old man was quite delightful. None of your "my dearing" or "my loving" nonsense, or anxiety about everything he likes to eat or drink disagreeing with him; but good down-right, honest, hearty affection, which beautifully displayed in the happy smile with which she regarded the old fellow, and witnessed how truly he seemed to be enjoying himself. That's what I'd recommend all wives to do, who wish to preserve their good looks.—A woman's looks depend so much upon expression, that if that be spoiled, farewell to all her charms; and which nothing tends more to bring about than a countenance soured with imaginary cares, instead of being lighted up with thankfulness for innumerable blessings. That's what makes half the women wither away into wrinkles so early in life, whilst nothing renders their beauty so lasting as that placid look of pure benevolence which emanates from a heart full of thankfulness to God, affection for those nearest and dearest to them, and good will towards all mankind.—Blackwood's Magazine.

the Providence Railroad, and by that to Boston—a distance not greater than it would be by the road proposed by the Worcester Railroad Corporation, through Milford to Woonsocket. He gave some interesting facts respecting the business of Woonsocket and its neighboring villages. Woonsocket alone contains about 3,600 inhabitants, and is rapidly increasing in population and wealth; has twenty factories, containing 55,000 spindles, in operation, and upwards of sixty stores. The inhabitants were a working people, and they were desirous to bring the results of their industry direct to the capital city of New England.

On motion of Mr. Pettie, the resolutions were laid upon the table, for the purpose of hearing the report of the Engineer upon the surveys.

Mr. Nott, civil engineer, from Boston, appeared for Mr. Parrott, under whose direction the surveys had been made, and who was detained from appearing personally by sickness. The written report of Mr. Parrott, on the survey from Woonsocket to Needham, was first read by Mr. Nott, and then an appendix to the report, containing the particulars of an exploration and partial survey of a branch from Needham to Dedham village. It would be impracticable, in this notice, to enter into the details of the Engineer's report. The whole distance, by this new survey, from the State line, at Woonsocket, to Boston, is 31 58-100 miles. The line is very direct, large portions of it being perfectly straight; no curve of less than 3219 feet radius, and no grade exceeding 30 feet per mile. The length of the proposed branch from Needham to Dedham village is four miles, and perfectly feasible.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Samuel Greene, Esq., of Woonsocket, having, in the morning, nominated Willis Cook, Esq., to act in his stead, as one of the Vice Presidents of the Convention, it was, on motion of Mr. Sanger, voted, that Willis Cook, Esq., of Woonsocket, be requested to act as Vice President, in place of Mr. Greene.

Mr. Stone, engineer, from Rhode Island, having been called upon, made a report upon the survey of two lines just completed by him, from the State line, at Woonsocket, to the Connecticut State line, at Williams' factory, a distance of twenty miles, and there to connect with the Boston and New York line, in Connecticut. Mr. Stone gave a very favorable report of the lines just surveyed. He stated that the one passing by Slaterville was the more favorable, in regard to business and direction, and that by running about a mile further South, the directness of the whole line may be still further maintained. The surveys were not completed, nor the estimates of expense yet prepared. The grade would nowhere exceed thirty feet per mile.

Mr. Greene, of Woonsocket, made some further interesting statements respecting the line surveyed through Rhode Island, a large portion of it having been made under his observation.

Rev. Mr. Bayden, of Woonsocket, next addressed the Convention, with much eloquence and effect. He closed his remarks by confirming the statements which had been made in respect to the "Petite Route," and said that in Woonsocket the people were to a man in its favor.

Mr. Pettie then called the attention of the Convention to the Survey from Needham to Boston. The plan and profiles were exhibited and explained in detail, and the route was shown to be perfectly feasible, without a departure from the previously formed favorable grades and curves.

In addition to the line exhibited, Mr. Pettie stated that a line had been run through Brighton, quite near the village, and that it might be a close question to choose between the two. In relation to the branch from Needham to Dedham village, Mr. Pettie stated that a line would be run from Dover Iron Works, as well as Needham to Dedham, and the most favorable of the two lines, considering all interests, would be adopted in the petition for a charter.

The resolutions were then called up, and the President having expressed the hope that a voice from Boston might be heard.

Samuel Wales, Jr., Esq., of that city, addressed the Convention in behalf of the project. We cannot attempt even a sketch of the truly sensible and able speech of Mr. Wales. He spoke like a man well versed in Railroad questions, and favored the friends of the "Petite Route" with valuable practical advice. He enlarged upon the national character of the proposed project, and indicated that the Massachusetts section of the great central route to New York, would commend itself to the unanimous favor of the merchants of Boston and New York, as strongly as to the manufacturing and agricultural interests upon the line of the road.

He alluded to the vast and rapid increase of the business and population of Boston, and stated that the time had arrived when both Boston and New York demand an improved and direct communication with each other, not subject to the detentions and casualties of steamboat navigation. He was glad to witness the harmony and union, which existed among the friends of this project, throughout the whole extent of the line, and believed that union and perseverance would secure the road. Massachusetts had never failed eventually to do justice to her citizens and herself, and the friends of this route had everything to hope and nothing to fear.

Mr. Hurd, of Brighton, made some interesting statements to the meeting in relation to the importance of such a direct road through Brighton. He said the receipts at the Worcester Depot, in that town, were already a thousand dollars a week—but that on a direct and continuous Railroad between Boston and New York, the business would be still greater. He stated that the people in Brighton had of late taken a deep and active interest in the project. This fact was strongly confirmed by the large delegation present from that village.

Samuel A. Walker, Esq., of Brookline, was next introduced to the Convention, and communicated some very valuable information respecting the views of the citizens of that place, in respect to the proposed road. He said that the line of survey had been run in the right place, and in the only direction where a road could be built in Brookline, without great expense and opposition; but that the inhabitants, instead of opposing the present line, would favor it. (The presence of several well known and influential gentlemen from Brookline, who had expressed an interest in the project, was another of the gratifying features of the meeting.) Mr. Walker alluded to the opposing parties interested in other roads, and believed we need fear nothing from them. Interested men might try to monopolize, but they could not succeed in their attempt. On a fair trial, the people in this State always succeeded in obtaining their rights.

Mr. Whitaker expressed much gratification to hear gentlemen, well experienced in railroad enterprises, express such strong confidence of the certain success of this project. He entertained no doubt of ultimate success—but the attitude assumed by opposing Corporations to the accomplishment of this enterprise, was so glaring to be lost sight of for an instant. He likened the motto of "union and perseverance," but must make an addition to it. Union, perseverance and vigilance—vigilance early and late, and the day is ours.

The resolutions were passed unanimously.

It was voted, that the proceedings of the Convention be published. The thanks of the meeting were voted to the officers of the Convention. Likewise to the Committee who made provision for the comfort and convenience of the Convention. The delegations from the towns interested in the proposed railroad were generally quite large, and were estimated to number together about four hundred. At five o'clock, the Convention adjourned.

GREAT HURRICANE AT KEY WEST. A gale commenced blowing at Key West, on the 11th ult., and in a short time increased to a perfect hurricane. The tide was five feet high, and ran through the centre of the town at the rate of six miles per hour. The inhabitants fled to the back part of the town that being a little higher, and laid down holding on to the bushes. Only about six out of six hundred houses remain uninjured; many being destroyed. All the wharves washed away or injured. The fort is a mass of ruins. The custom house much injured, but the United States Barrack remains uninjured. The light houses at Key West and Sand Key destroyed. The United States brig Perry, was wrecked on the Florida reef; the Revenue Cutter Morris, ashore on a reef in two feet water, a mile from the channel. Many lives were lost.

HURRICANE AT HAVANA. On the 10th and 11th ult. Havana was visited by a violent hurricane, by which the wharves are torn up and much injured, and are covered with wrecked property. The town has suffered comparatively little, but the suburbs very much. The total number of lives lost is not yet known. Ninety-two vessels sunk, destroyed or otherwise injured, only twelve escaping. Forty or fifty coasting vessels wrecked. Several vessels of war were more or less injured, many of them total wrecks; none of them American.

Letters from Matanzas have been received, from which it appears that the hurricane was very destructive in that harbor. All the vessels at anchor, excepting two, were driven ashore, and much damage was done to other property. The cane on the plantations has been greatly injured.

REV. MR. LOVEJOY. The meeting which was appointed in handbills at the Lyceum Hall, in this town, to hear an address from this gentleman, will be held at Rev. Mr. Allen's Meeting-house, the former place having been previously engaged by the whigs for a caucus. [See Notice.]

NEW YORK. The recent election in the "Empire State" has resulted quite favorable to the whig party. It appears that the whig nominee for Governor, (Young) and the democratic candidate for Lieutenant Governor, (Gardner) have both been chosen—the former by ten thousand plurality over Gov. Silas Wright who was supported for re-election. The whigs have probably chosen twenty-four and the democrats ten members of Congress—the "natives" we believe have failed to choose a single member. In the present Congress, the democrats have twenty-one, the whigs nine, and the natives four Representatives. The State Assembly most likely will have a whig majority, while the Senate will be democratic. The last Legislature had democratic majorities in both branches.

This result has been produced by a union of the whigs and anti-renters; and is no certain indication of the political character of the State relative to the two prominent parties. As far as returns have been received there appears to be a large majority against the new State Constitution, and against extending the right of suffrage to colored persons.

NEW JERSEY. The whigs have carried this State, retaining majorities in both branches of the State Legislature. Four, if not five, whig members of Congress have been chosen.

William R. Johnson, brother of Col. Richard M. Johnson, has been elected a Member of Congress from Arkansas. He received nearly a unanimous vote.

Mr. Charles Sumner has published his card, explicitly and decidedly declining to stand as a candidate for Congress.

The New England Iron Company, at Providence, are making twenty tons of first rate railroad iron daily.

The Legislature of Rhode Island, in Grand Committee, have elected John H. Clarke, of Providence, as Senator in Congress for six years from the 4th of March next. He had 59 votes against 34 for T. W. Dorr, and 5 scattering.

The Steamer Rhode Island, which left Stonington on Saturday evening last, with a large number of passengers and the Eastern mail, was blown ashore on Sunday, a tremendous gale prevailing at the time, about six miles east of Huntington, on Long Island. No lives were lost, and the boat has been "got off" without much damage.

The democratic candidate has been elected to fill the vacancy from Alabama, occasioned by resignation, instead of the whig nominee as was supposed when the first intelligence of the result had been received.

The Boston Bee announces the death of Mr. David H. Eia, an exemplary citizen of that city. He was well known as the printer of "Zion's Herald," the mechanical department of which he superintended since its first publication. He was free-hearted and generous to a fault—too often neglecting his own business to render assistance to his neighbor. His purse was always open to the needy—as many a poor printer will bear record. Though ever a hard working man, like most of his craft, he died poor.

A CARD.

The Rector of "Christ Church, Quincy," hereby returns his grateful acknowledgements for the favor and respect shown towards himself and his family in the late Donation Party at his house. The salutations of so many friends was cheering indeed, and the gifts of their bestowal were truly acceptable because bestowed in a willing mind. If it be more blessed to give than to receive (and so we must believe for Heaven asserts it) then those friends are indeed greatly blessed. May they be rewarded in "good measure, pressed down, and running over." Christ Church Rectory, Nov. 6th, 1846.

NOTICES.

Democrats of Quincy.

You are notified to assemble in the Town Hall, THIS EVENING, Saturday, Nov. 7, at seven o'clock, for the purpose of nominating a candidate to be supported on Monday next, as Representative to the next General Court, and to adopt suitable measures, for bringing every democrat to the polls on Monday next. Let every democrat do his duty on that day.

Hon Isaac H. Wright of Roxbury, will be present and address the meeting. Per order.

Come and Hear.

Owen Lovejoy of Illinois, a brother of the party of Freedom, will address the citizens of Braintree on the subject of Slavery and its consequences, in the Town House, THIS EVENING, Nov. 7th, commencing at half past six o'clock. Let every one come and bring his or her neighbor with them. By order of the Committee. Braintree, Nov. 7th, 1846.

Whigs, Awake!

The Whigs of Quincy, one and all, are requested to meet at the Lyceum Room, on SATURDAY EVENING, Nov. 7th, at seven o'clock, for the purpose of nominating a candidate to be supported on Monday next, as Representative to the General Court, and to transact such other business as may come before them. Per order of Town Committee.

The Orator of the Day.

Rev. J. C. Lovejoy, of Cambridgeport (Brother of the Martyr of Alton) will address the citizens of Quincy, on the subject of Slavery and responsibilities of American Freemen at the approaching Election, at Mr. Allen's Meeting-house, THIS EVENING, Nov. 7th, commencing at half past six o'clock. Men, Women, Whigs, Democrats and Abolitionists—all who love liberty and hate slavery—come, hear, judge and act. He will lecture on the subject of Slavery, at the same place, on SUNDAY EVENING, Nov. 8th, commencing as above.

Notice.

NORFOLK SS. At a meeting of the County Commissioners at Dedham, on the 27th day of October, by adjournment from the September term next preceding—

On the petition of William Thayer and others, presented on the seventh day of August last past, alleging that common convenience and necessity require and praying that the Commissioners will lay out a new public highway in Braintree from a point on the old road leading from Quincy to Randolph, near the shop of Warren Mansfield, and running to Granite Street, at a point near the crossing of West Street. The Commissioners, having caused due notice of said petition to be given to all persons and parties interested and having viewed the route of said highway described in the petition and fully heard said parties do adjudge that common convenience and necessity require that said new Highway should be laid out as therein described.

It is therefore Ordered, That the County Commissioners will meet at the house of Ralph Arnold in Braintree, on THURSDAY, the tenth day of December next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, and thence proceed to locate said highway, and that an attested copy of this adjudication and order thereon be served upon the Clerk of said town of Braintree, thirty days, at least, before said meeting; that a like copy be published in the Quincy Patriot, a newspaper printed in Quincy, the last publication thereof to be fourteen days at least, before said meeting, and that like copies be posted up in two or more public places in said Braintree, fourteen days at least before the aforesaid meeting, that all persons and parties interested may then and there appear and be heard if they see fit.

Notice.

To the Honorable the County Commissioners for the County of Norfolk:

THE subscribers, citizens of Weymouth and Braintree, respectfully represent that the communication between the above towns is very inconvenient, that from the extreme western Town Road in Weymouth, near the Rail Road Crossing, to the centre of Braintree, by the southern route, it is 7.34 miles, and by the northern route 5.12 miles; but, that a direct line from the above Rail Road Crossing to the Town Road in Braintree, near the centre of the eastern line, is about 200 rods. Your petitioners, therefore, respectfully request that you will lay out a new public road in Braintree, from a point near the above said Rail Road Crossing to a point near the house of Samuel Penniman, on Liberty Street, so called, passing through lands of Dea John Vining, heirs of Cotton Tullis and Samuel Penniman. And your petitioners represent that the street called West Street, in Weymouth, and the street called West Street, in Braintree, are narrow, inconvenient, and unsafe; and they, therefore, request you to view the same and to widen and straighten the same on lands of Vining, Tullis, Dea John Vining, Zachariah Kingman, Hannah T. Reed, Ezra Reed, Ruben Loud, Thomas Nash and William G. Nash, in your judgment, the public safety and interest require it. And as in duty bound will ever pray.

POETRY.

THE MOTHERLESS.

You're weary, my precious ones, your eyes
Are wandering far and wide;
Think ye of her, who knew so well
Your tender thoughts to guide;
Who could to Wisdom's sacred love
Your fixed attention claim:
Ah! never from your hearts erase
That blessed mother's name!

'Tis time to say your evening hymn,
My youngest infant dove!
Come press thy velvet cheek to mine,
And learn the lay of love;
My sheltering arms can clasp you all,
My poor deserted throng!
Cling as you used to cling to her
Who sings the angel's song.

Begin, sweet birds! the accustomed strain,
Come, warble loud and clear;
Alas! alas! you're weeping all,
You're sobbing in my ear!
Good night—go say the prayer she taught
Beside your little bed,
The lips that used to bless you there,
Are silent with the dead!

A father's hand your course may guide,
Amid the thorns of life;
As care protect those shrinking plants,
That dread the storms of strife
But who upon your infant hearts
Shall like that mother write?
Who touch the strings that rule the soul?
Dear, smitten flock!—Good night.

HE LOVED HER NOT.

He loved her not, he only thought
To while a tedious hour away,
The maiden's side he ever sought,
For she was gayest of the gay;
With her his cares he'd half forget,
Her was the sunshine of the heart,
And she was happy when they met,
His presence could such joy impart.

She greeted him with laughing eyes,
While careless mirth was in her tone,
And none could tell that tears and sighs
Displaced her smiles when he was gone;
Alas! she found he loved her not,
(Too late of this sad truth aware)
She learned too full well to know her lot,
But not its hopeless pangs to cure.

Her blooming cheek grew wan and pale,
Her form like drooping lily pined,
He saw her strength and spirit fail,
And turned some happier fate to find.
At length he missed her from the crowd,
Perchance among the rest he sighed,
When wondering strangers told aloud,
That of a broken heart she died.

Once in his breast a flame had burned,
He sought a mutual love to wake,
Scorn'd—and his heart to ice had turn'd,
It was too stern, too proud to break.
And love, these are thy strange decrees,
We seek some prize we never can gain,
Despite the heart obtained with ease,
Fixing our hopes—where hope is vain.

TO A LITTLE GIRL.

I love to gaze upon thy face,
For there, in loveliness I trace
The impress of thy mind;
And in thy smiling smile I see
A buoyant spirit, light and free,
Unfettered as the wind.

Thy swelling soul is full of love,
Deep springing from the fount above,
Whence purest feelings flow;
And gliding with a hallowed beam,
The saddened soul of life's dull stream,
Thou'lt must taste below.

Oh, may thy heart, thus formed to bless,
E'er meet the fond and warm caress
Of sweet, confiding love;
And may thy swiftly fleeting hours,
Be ever marked with choicest flowers,
Till called to realms above.

And when thy journey here is past,
And death's stern mission comes at last
To take thee from the earth,
Oh, may thou reach that unknown shore,
Those blessed regions to explore,
That home of thy spirit's birth.

ANECDOTES.

The "Rev. Johnny M—" had his study partly under the common stairs of the house. He was frequently "bothered" with the clutter Molly made in her passage over the stairs during his "meditations," and "siddies," and "soliloquies." Molly, said he one day, whether it is easier to go up stairs or to come down? To come down, to be sure, sir. I thought as much, said he, for I never see you come down ten times where you've gone up once.

A French gentleman, travelling in his cabriolet, was accosted by a man walking along the road, who begged the favor of him to put his great coat, which he found very heavy, into his carriage. "With all my heart," said the gentleman, "but if we should not be travelling to the same place, how will you get your coat?" "Monsieur," said the man, with great gravity, "I shall be in it."

An auctioneer, speaking to a horse dealer about the situation of an estate he was to sell, in a level neighborhood, said—"That country is exceedingly beautiful and I do so admire a rich flat!" So do I, sir, said the grinning jockey.

An Irishman speaking of the excellent facilities for travelling in the old country, averred that a man could not only travel from London to Brighton cheaper than he could stay at home, but "an faith, it wouldn't take half so long to do it."

DR. FERNANDS

Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pusules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impudence in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an injudicious use of Mercury. The complexion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernands, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practicing as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernands, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernands himself, consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions, or even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the incredulous invalid that no more has been said in its favor than its virtues safely warrant. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine.

To prevent imposition, each bottle of directions accompanying the medicine will be signed by J. K. Fernands, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States.

J. K. FERNANDS, Indian Physician.

CERTIFICATES.

From W. Abercrombie of Quincy, Merchant Trader.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernands' Medicine.

Sir—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Inflammation of the Lungs, and a Disordered Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast enailing upon me the worst of all human diseases to which mortals are heir to—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines which were recommended, but from all of them I obtained not the least relief.

About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised my blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.

From Ibrahim Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy State Bank.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark:

DEAR SIR—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum.

I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health as he has stated, has been on the decline, that he has had frequent turns of spitting blood, such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed in him every evidence that his health has been restored, and I have it from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great flatulency, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, &c.

I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation, which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,

ter. Henry Manning was evidently annoyed at the announcement.

I wish, he said, that George had chosen to make his visit in the summer, when most of the people to whom I should hesitate to introduce him would have been absent. I should be sorry to hurt his feelings, but really, to introduce a western farmer into polished society—Henry Manning shuddered, and was silent. And then to choose this winter of all winters for his visit, and to come in December, just at the very time that I heard yesterday Miss Harcourt was coming from Washington, to spend a few weeks with her friend, Mrs. Duffield.

And what has Miss Harcourt's visit to Mrs. Duffield to do with George's visit to us? asked Mrs. Manning.

A great deal—at least it has a great deal to do with my regret that he should come just now. I told you how I became acquainted with Emma Harcourt, in Europe, and what a splendid creature she is. Even in Paris she bore the palm for wit and beauty—and fashion too—that is in English and American society. But I did not tell you that she received me with such distinguished favor, and evinced so much pretty consciousness at my attentions, that, had not her father, having been chosen one of the electors of President and Vice President, hurried from Paris in order to be in this country in time for his vote, I should probably have been induced to marry her. Her father is in Congress this year, and you see, she no sooner learns that I am here, than she comes to spend part of the winter with a friend in New York.

Henry rose at this, walked to the glass, surveyed his elegant figure, and continuing to cast occasional glances at it as he walked backwards and forwards through the room, resumed the conversation, or rather his communications.

All this is very encouraging, doubtless, but Emma Harcourt is so perfectly elegant, so thoroughly refined, that I dread the effect upon her of any other association—by-the-by, mother, if I obtain her permission to introduce you to her, you will not wear that brown hat in visiting her; a brown hat is my aversion—it is positively vulgar—but to return to George—how can I introduce him, with his rough, boisterous, western manner, to this courtly lady?—the very thought chills me—and Henry Manning shivered—and yet how can I avoid it, if we should be engaged?

With December came the beautiful Emma Harcourt, and Mrs. Duffield's house was thronged with her admirers. Hers was the form and movement of the Huntress Queen, rather of one trained in the halls of fashion. There was a joyous freedom in her air, her step, her glance, which, had she been less beautiful, less talented, less fortunate in social position, or in wealth, would have placed her under the ban of fashion; but as it was, she commenced fashion, and even Henry Manning, the very slave of conventionalism, had no criticism for her. He had been among the first to call on her, and the blush that flitted across her cheek, the smile that played upon her lips as he was announced, might well have flattered one of even less vanity.

The very next day, before Henry had time to improve the symptoms in his favor, on returning home at five o'clock, to his dinner, he found a stranger in the parlor with his mother. The gentleman rose on his entrance, and he had scarcely time to glance at the tall, manly form, the lofty air, the commanding brow, ere he found himself clasped in his arms, with the exclamation, dear Henry, how rejoiced I am to see you again!

In George Manning the physical and intellectual had been developed in rare harmony. He was taller and larger in every way, than his brother Henry, and the self-reliance which the latter had laboriously attained from the mastery of all conventional rules, was his by virtue of a courageous soul, which held itself above all rules but those prescribed by its own high sense of the right. There was a singular contrast, rendered yet more striking by some points of resemblance between the pupil of society, and the child of the forest—between the Parisian elegance of Henry, and the proud free grace of George. His was the step and bearing which we have seen in the Indian chief; but thought had left his impress on his brow, and there was in his countenance that indescribable air of sentiment which marks the polished mind. In a very few minutes Henry became reconciled to his brother's arrival, and satisfied with him in all respects but one—his dress. This was of the finest cloth, but made into large loose trousers, and a species of hunting shirt trimmed with fur, belted around the waist, and descending to the knee, instead of the tight pantaloons and closely fitting body coat prescribed by fashion. The little party lingered long over the table—it was seven o'clock when they rose from it.

Dear mother, said George Manning. I am sorry to leave you this evening, but I will make you rich amends to-morrow, by introducing to you the friend I am going to visit, if you will permit me. Henry, it is so long since I was in New York, that I need some direction in finding my way—must I turn up or down Broadway for No. —in going from this street?

No.,—exclaimed Henry, in surprise; you must be mistaken—that is Mrs. Duffield's.

Then I am quite right, for it is at Mrs. Duffield's that I expect to meet my friend this evening.

With some curiosity to know what friend of George's could have so completely the entire of the fashionable Mrs. Duffield's house, as to make an appointment there, he proposed to go with him and show him the way. There was a momentary hesitation in George's manner before he replied. Very well, I will be obliged to you.

But—excuse me, George—you are not surely going in that dress—this is one of Mrs. Duffield's reception evenings, and early as it is, you will find company there.

George laughed as he replied, they must take me as I am Henry. We do not receive our fashions from Paris at the West.

Henry almost repented his offer to accompany his brother; but it was too late to withdraw, for George, unconscious of this feeling, had taken his cloak and cap and was awaiting his escort. As they approached Mrs. Duffield's house, George, who had hitherto led the conversation, became silent, or answered his brother only in monosyllables, and that not always to the purpose. As they entered the hall, the hat and cloaks displayed there showed that as Henry supposed, they were not the earliest visitors.

George paused for a moment, and then said you must go in without me, Henry—show me a room where there is no company, he continued, turning to a servant—and take this card into Mrs. Duffield—be sure to give it to Mrs. Duffield herself.

The servant bowed low to the commanding stranger, and Henry almost mechanically obeyed his direction, muttering to himself, "Free and easy, upon my honor." He had scarcely entered the usual reception room and made his bow to Mrs. Duffield, when the servant presented his brother's card. He watched her closely, and saw a smile playing over her lips as her eyes rested upon it. She gazed anxiously at Miss Harcourt, and crossing the room to a group in which she stood, she drew her aside. After a few whispered words, Mrs. Duffield placed the card in Miss Harcourt's hand. A sudden flash of joy irradiated every feature of her beautiful face, and Henry Manning saw, that but for Mrs. Duffield's restraining hand, she would have rushed from the room. Recalled thus to a recollection of others, she looked around her, and her eyes met his. In an instant her face was covered with blushes, and she drew back with embarrassed consciousness,—almost immediately, however, she raised her head with a proud bright expression, and although she did not look at Henry Manning, he felt she was conscious of his observation, as she passed with a composed, yet joyous step from the room.

Henry Manning was awakened from a dream. It was not a very pleasant awakening, but as his vanity rather his heart was touched, he was able to conceal his chagrin, and appear as interesting and agreeable as usual. He now expected with some impatience the denouement of the comedy. An hour passed away, and Mrs. Duffield's eye began to consult the marble time-piece on her mantle. The chime for another half hour rang out, and she left the room and returned in a few minutes, leaning on the arm of George Manning.

Who is that? what noble looking man is that? were questions Henry Manning heard from many—a very few, the exclamation, how oddly he is dressed! Before the evening was over, Henry began to feel that he was eclipsed in his own theatre—that George, if not in the fashion, was yet more the fashion than he.

Following the proud happy glance of his brother's eye a quarter of an hour later, Henry saw Miss Harcourt entering the room in an opposite direction from that in which he had lately come. If this was a ruse on her part to veil the connection between their movements it was a fruitless caution. None who had seen her before could now fail to observe the softening character of her beauty, and those who saw whenever his eyes rested on her, could scarcely doubt his influence over her.

The next morning George Manning brought Miss Harcourt to visit his mother, and Mrs. Manning rose greatly in her son Henry's estimation when he saw the affectionate difference evinced her by the proud beauty.

How strange my manner must have seemed to you sometimes, said Miss Harcourt to Henry one day. I was engaged to George, long before I met you in Europe, and though I have never had courage enough to mention him to you, I wonder a little that you never spoke of him. I never doubted for a moment that you were acquainted with our engagement.

I do not even yet understand where and how you and George met.

We met at home—my father was Governor of the Territory—State now—in which your uncle lives—our homes were very near each other's, and so we met almost daily while I was still a child. We had all sorts of adventures together, for George was a great favorite with my father, and I was permitted to go with him anywhere. He saved my life twice—once at the imminent peril of his own, when with the wilfulness of a spoiled child I would ride a horse which he told me I could not manage. Oh! you know not half his nobleness, and tears moistened the bright eyes of the happy girl.

Henry Manning was touched through all his conventionalism, yet the moment after he said, George is a fine fellow certainly; but I wish you could persuade him to dress a little more like other people.

I would not if I could, exclaimed Emma Harcourt, while the blood rushed to her temples; fashions and all such conventional regulations are made for those who have no innate conception of the right, the noble, the beautiful—for such as he—he is above fashion.

What Emma would not ask, she did not fail to recognise as another proof of correct judgement, when George Manning laid aside his Western custom and assumed one less remarkable.

Henry Manning had received a new idea,—there are those who are above the fashion. Allied to this was another thought, which in time found entrance to his mind, that it would at least be as profitable to devote our energies to the acquisition of true nobility of soul, pure and high thought, and refined taste, as to the study of those conventionalisms which are but their outer garment, and can at best only conceal for a short time their absence.

MANIC FRANKS. In the Lunatic Asylum, of New York, there are many remarkable cases of individuals whose strange conceits of who and what they are, like those of the inmates of similar establishments, induce a feeling of sadness at their unhappy condition. Amongst the more common cases, there is a female whose mind is continually occupied with the idea that some distinguished personage would shortly claim her as a bride, and another, (forty years old,) in daily expectation that some one is coming to elope with her. Amongst the more extraordinary cases, there is a girl, sixteen years old, who dances continually. From the awkwardness of her locomotive carriage she was known by the sobriquet of "Fanny Ellsler." She would exhibit her antics about the room in exceeding great glee; run a short distance and leap over the large spittoons, with all the grace of an animated log of wood, all the while nearly bursting with laughter. A poor raving young woman employs herself in talking to some imaginary person behind the door, whom she exorts to speak louder because she cannot hear him. A male patient fancies himself a whip lash and keeps incessantly cracking himself on the approach of the other patients, and another was in continual fear of assassination, and had to be furnished every morning with a written protection, which he shows to every body.

LONG HAIRD CHILDREN. Cut your children's hair frequently, the feeble ones more particularly should never be allowed to have hair of any considerable length. The joy the little ones exhibit when they have been shorn of their mother's pride, will give her sufficient joy to fill her heart with another kind of pride, particularly if she thinks the father has not noticed the child as much as she thinks he should have done. She will soon see a marked difference in his affection for it, if she will keep it nicely combed. Even if the mother is of a cross, unhappy disposition, if she will take the trouble to wash her face and comb her hair nicely, it will be almost impossible for her to indulge in anger, until she disarranges her hair again.

DELICATE HANDS. Girls sadly miss it, who expect to win good husbands, by showing their delicate hands and speaking contemptuously of culinary employments—Who had not rather see clean pots and kettles, bright tins and clean floors made so by tough hands, than greasy walls, black plates, dirty floors and hands too delicate for the sunshine to play upon?—N. Y. Tribune.

ENORMOUS TREES. It is stated in a late number of the North American Review, that there are cypress trees in Mexico, whose ages have been ascertained to be upward of three thousand years. A cypress stands at Montezuma whose girl is 45 feet. But the largest known stands at Santa del Thule, is forty feet in diameter and is apparently healthy and sound.

THE HUSBAND. That man deserves not a wife's generous love, who will not greet her with smiles, as he returns from the labors of the day—who will not try to endear her to her home by his kind attentions and unvarying love. There is not one wife in a thousand who is so unfeeling as to withstand such an influence, and be discontented with such a home.

FEVER AND AGUE. Dr. Poqueville, in his travels in the Morea, says: "I have seen intermittent fevers subdued entirely by a mixture of strong coffee and lemon or lime juice, which is a successful remedy all over the country. The proportions are three quarters of an ounce of coffee ground fine, with two ounces of lemon juice, and three ounces of water, the mixture to be drank warm and fasting."

SECOND MARRIAGE. "Julia, my dear," said old Professor H —, the other day, to his young and pretty wife, "when I die you will be rich; but if you ever so far forget me as to marry again, I will come from the grave to your bridal couch, and put my cold hands upon you."

"Ah, do not fear my dear husband," replied she playfully, "you will never live to see that!"

"I am delighted to hear you say so, my love," said the old man abstractedly.

EDUCATION. To rub book leaves upon the back of a child, and beat in the learning. To educate young ladies, is to let them know all about the ologies, the anomies, the ticks, and the ticks, the ticks, and the masticies, but nothing about the ings—such as sewing, knitting, washing, baking, making, and puddling.

In retrospect we shake away the snow of time from the watergreen of memory; and behold the fair years of childhood, uncovered, fresh, green, and balmy, standing far off before us.

"INFORMATION."

MA. EDITOR.—The caption above seems to require more attention generally than is given to the word, and although you do all you can through the medium of your columns, yet much now can be done with your aid and advice, which I believe you are ready to grant; and I would therefore, suggest that during the long evenings now approaching, that a free Reading Room [supported by voluntary subscriptions and donations], be opened where many and all could visit and pass hours in perusing public documents, periodicals, and newspapers, which I have no doubt would be furnished generally free of charge, and therefore the expense of the room would be comparatively small. The regulations of the room should be to admit all without distinction of party or sect, and, in fact, termed a Reading Lyceum. Now, Mr. Editor, if the hints herein are worthy of consideration, put them in shape and call the citizens of Quincy to the importance thereof; and, if the project takes, you will have the satisfaction of saying you have been instrumental thereto.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, NOV. 14, 1846.

TOWN MEETINGS.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of the Town of Quincy, holden at the Town Hall, on Monday last, William Seaver was chosen Moderator, and the following votes were passed—

Voted—That a Committee of seven be chosen to confer and to act in conjunction with the Supervisors of the Adams Temple and School Fund upon the subject of building an Academy in this town, in accordance with the provisions contained in the deeds of Gift of the munificent donor of said Fund, and take into consideration the whole subject of establishing such a High School as shall meet the views of the donor and the wants of the inhabitants of the Town; and if said Committee, after due consideration should be of opinion that it is expedient to build an Academy at this time, that they be requested to procure plans of a suitable building and estimates of cost and report to the Town as soon as the nature of the subject will permit, at a meeting to be called for that purpose.

Chose George Newcomb, 2d, Dr. William B. Duggan, Rev. Orange Clark, Israel W. Munroe, Manning W. Sullivan, William D. Gray, Lysander Richards said Committee.

Voted—That said Committee be requested to meet at the Town Hall, or the Lyceum Room, once in a fortnight until they report.

Voted—To refer the third article, which relates to the removal of the Adams Library to one of the rooms now occupied by Messrs. Clapp & Richards, to the above Committee.

Voted—To indefinitely postpone the subject relative to selling a piece of land to Charles E. Miller, Esq., near his residence.

The following tables show the result of the balloting for the election of officers as provided, which took place in this town on Monday last.

For Governor.
Whole number of votes,	448
George N. Briggs,	225
Isaac Davis,	182
Samuel E. Sewall,	45
David Bryant, 7—Theodore Parker, 1—Wendall Phillips, 1.

John Reed,	222
George Hood,	109
John M. Brewster,	47
John Allen, 7—Francis Jackson, 1—Lemuel Capen, 1—Wendall Phillips, 1.

For Representative to Congress.
Whole number of votes,	445
John Q. Adams,	232
Isaac H. Wright,	165
Appleton Howe,	38
Lunsford Lane, 8—James W. Barter, 1—Increase S. Smith, 1.

For Senators.
Whole number of votes,	447
Samuel Guild,	219
James Maguire,	219
Truman Clarke,	220
Artemus Brown,	169
Jesse Pierce,	171
Edgar K. Whitaker,	180
Willis Fisher,	45
Martin Torrey,	46
John Gulliver,	44

Henry Barker, 2—James Dorr, 8—Charles Marsh, 7—Charles Breck, 1—Edmund Quincy, 1—Hiram W. Blanchard, 1.

WASHINGTON MEETINGS. The Norfolk County Whigstonians will hold a Social Convention at Milton Mills, on Saturday evening, Nov. 14th, at the Methodist church. Addresses by J. F. Coles and several county speakers. A convention will also be held at Randolph on Sunday evening, the 15th, at Stetson Hall, commencing at six o'clock. E. K. Whitaker and E. Thompson will address the meeting.

NEW YORK. There can be no longer a doubt that the new Constitution has been adopted by a large majority. The people of the Western part of the State voted strongly in its favor. In relation to free suffrage, less of the results are known.

The Secretary of War has issued an order allowing a bounty of two dollars for each able-bodied man brought to the rendezvous, and accepted for public service.

MASSACHUSETTS ELECTION. The returns of votes for Governor, in all the towns of the State, with only two exceptions, show the following result:—

George N. Briggs, 54,585; Isaac Davis, 33,215; all others, 13,608. It will thus be perceived that Gov. Briggs is re-elected by the people—a result which shows the high estimation the public entertain of his virtues, patriotism, and statesmanship.

Whig members of Congress have been elected in all the districts of the State, with the exception of the fourth, and there the Whig nominee lacks an election by five hundred votes.

In the Senate, the Whigs have elected at least twenty-three members, and the seventeen vacancies will of course be filled in joint convention by gentlemen of the same politics.

The House of Representatives will contain over one hundred and seventy Whig members. About thirty democrats and five abolitionists have been elected.

The sum total of the election on Monday last, is that the different branches of the State Government will be Whig, and nine of the ten members of Congress of the same political views.

REPRESENTATIVES CHOSEN. The following list is all we have been enabled to procure of Representatives elected to the General Court from towns in the Eighth Congressional District.

Randolph—SAMUEL S. MANN.
Braintree—NATHAN L. WHITE.
Dedham—EDWARD L. KEYS.
Needham—E. K. WHITAKER.
Dorchester—OLIVER HALL and ELEAZER J. BISPHAM.
Franklin—SHADRACH ATWOOD.
Medfield—CHAS. C. SEWALL.
Roxbury—ALLEN PUTNAM and EDWARD TURNER.
Sharon—OTIS JOHNSON.
Walden—FRANCIS W. BIRD.
Woburn—SOLIMON J. BEAL.
Dorset—REV. RALPH SAINGER.
Medbury—WARREN LOVING.
Abington—JERKINS LANE.
North Bridgewater—JOSIAH W. KINGMAN.
Hingham—JOTHAM LINCOLN.
Norfolk—MARSHALL S. RICE.
Weymouth, Milton, Wrentham, Brookline, Bellingham, Stoughton, Foxboro', Quincy and Canton, in Norfolk county, and Brighton, Holliston, Natick and Sherburne, in Middlesex county, have failed to choose Representatives. Hull, in Plymouth county, is not entitled to a member.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS. By the annexed table, it will be seen that our worthy and venerable townsman, Hon. John Q. Adams, has been re-elected to Congress by a very large majority. This result is gratifying to many of Mr. Adams' political opponents for the patriotic stand he took on the American side of the Oregon question. May a life so long devoted to the welfare and happiness of the country be prolonged to the latest time.

ELECTIONS. Delaware has elected a democratic Governor, but the members of Congress and the Legislature are in doubt from the returns thus far. Michigan has gone for the democrats—Governor, Legislature, and the entire delegation in Congress. Iowa has elected probably a Whig Governor—from the returns it is uncertain which party will have the Legislature—the democrats have doubtless chosen their Congressmen.

FOREIGN NEWS. The steamer Britannia arrived at Boston on Saturday morning last, after a tedious passage of seventeen and a half days, bringing news to the twentieth ult.

The steamship Great Britain had not been got off, but had moved about a hundred yards nearer the shore, and was fast in the sand, with twelve feet of water in her hold. Hopes were still entertained that she would be got off.

Storms of unparalleled fury have raged in all parts of the globe. At sea, an immense amount of property has been swallowed up, and many lives have fallen a prey to the destructive results of the raging elements.

The European Times says:—"The state of trade, of course, considerably affected by the state of the Provision market; and the doctrine of the Free-traders, that as the necessities of life rise, so in the same proportion is production and consumption prostrated, is just now being strikingly realized.

The fears of impending famine, and the state of the grain markets, not only in England but in the neighboring countries, have produced a feeling in favor of throwing open the ports of admission, duty free, to every description of provisions; and a rumor seems lately to have gained ground that the government had it in contemplation so to do.

The famine in the highlands of Scotland is of the most frightful kind. The potato crop has wholly failed there, and many families exist entirely on shell fish.

The cholera appears to be making its way slowly but surely towards Europe, in very nearly its former track.

Accounts from the south of Italy represent that the drought has been excessively severe.

The Monksper marriage is consummated. The great object of Louis Philippe's ambition is gratified—a French Prince stands on the footsteps of the Spanish throne.

The state of Ireland continues to be most distressing—hunger in the extreme. The famine spreads; disease, the attendant of scarcity, stalks abroad through all parts of the island, and the suffering peasantry, goaded on by despair, have shown symptoms of rebellion and outrage, hoping thereby to obtain an effectual relief from all their wants and privations.

A revolution broke out at Geneva, Switzerland, on Saturday, Oct. 3, in consequence of the refusal of the Council of State to vote for the unconditional dissolution of the League of the Catholic Cantons. After a sharp conflict the Government troops were defeated at all points, fell into confusion and surrendered. The council of State immediately resigned, and the insurgents organized a provisional government.

The fear of famine has overtaken the canaille of Paris, and riots have been the consequence. In addition to the rise in the price of the necessities of life, trade in Paris is dull at the present time, and these combined causes have led to the temporary outbreaks.

ENGINE MATTERS. The Hydrant Engine Company, of Milton, accompanied by a band of music, on invitation, will visit the Tiger Engine Company of this town to-day, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and after playing their respective engines, will partake of a collation furnished for the occasion by the "Tigers." A foretaste of the "things provided" warrant the opinion that it will be first-rate, in abundance, and satisfactory to all who participate.

MEXICO. No intelligence of any consequence has been received from Mexico or from the American army.

MONTEREY. A letter from an officer in the army, published in the Harrisburg Union, gives the following description of this city:

"Monterey is situated in the most beautiful valley in America, rivaling in splendor and variety of scenery the far famed valley of Cashmere. Hills rise above hills on all sides, until they pierce the clouds; the houses are all well built, the streets paved, and lamps at each corner. The gardens are all well watered, and filled with all descriptions of tropical fruits: grapes, oranges, apples, pears, pomegranates, dates, figs, citrons, lemons, limes, and in fact, every thing that will grow anywhere else, is here found in the greatest abundance. Oranges cost nothing. Arista's garden is the most beautiful one I have ever seen anywhere; there are many others of the same kind in the city. Looking from the heights into the valley, it resembles one immense piece of topography."

An individual has bequeathed to the Presbyterian church of Hagerstown, Penn., an annual sum of $800, on the express condition that they will sing only the Psalms of David. Any infraction of which, annuls the pension.

The first prize of the Berks Agricultural Association, for the best two years old bull, has been awarded to Prince Albert, says an English paper.

The war with Mexico is a capital means of using up old steamers. They are sold to the Government at exorbitant prices, sent to the Gulf of Mexico and lost. Others are then required to take their places.

JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT. We esteem it a pleasure to be able to recommend this medicine as the best calculated for the purpose of curing coughs, colds, sore throat, asthma, and all affections of the lungs, from a long personal acquaintance with Dr. Jayne. We know that he is not only a skillful physician, but a most successful one.

Dr. Jayne—Dear Sir, Being severely afflicted with BRONCHITIS—a hard Cough and Asthma—and finding every means failed of relieving me, Consumption appeared inevitable—but by using two bottles of your EXPECTORANT, I was restored to perfect health.

Respectfully recommending your medicine to all who are afflicted with the above diseases, I am, Sir, your obedient servant, JOHN ELLIS.

WISTAR'S BALM OF WILD CHERRY. The great remedy for Consumption, and the best medicine known to man for Asthma of every stage, Liver Complaints, Bronchitis, Influenza, Coughs, Colds, Bleeding of the Lungs, Shortness of Breath, pains and weakness in the Side, Breast, etc., and all other diseases of Pulmonary Organs. A very important disease over which this "Balm" exerts a very powerful influence, is that of a Diseased Liver. In this complaint it has undoubtedly proved more efficacious than any remedy hitherto employed, and in numerous instances when patients had endured long and severe suffering from the disease, without receiving the least benefit from various remedies, and when Mercury has been resorted to in vain, the use of this Balm has restored the Liver to a healthy action, and in many instances effected Permanent Cures, after every known remedy had failed to produce this desired effect.

Besides its astonishing efficacy in the diseases above mentioned, we also find it a very effectual remedy in Asthma, a complaint in which it has been extensively used with decided success, even in cases of years standing.

It not only emanates from a regular Physician, but has also been well tested in all the complaints for which it is recommended. It is not my intention, deceive the public by cloak in mystery, or in any way to conceal the character of this Balm, as a "Superior Medicine," I shall simply endeavor to give a brief statement of its usefulness, and flatter myself that its surprising efficacy will enable me to furnish such proofs of its virtues as will satisfy the most incredulous, that Consumption may and CAN BE CURED, if this medicine be resorted to in season.

None genuine, unless signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper.

For sale in Boston by S. W. FOWLE, 138 Wash. St. Quincy, by Mrs. E. HAYDEN.

NOTICE.—The present limits are inadequate to accommodate my numerous patrons of customers. On the 1st of February next, I shall commence to erect a "Superior Warehouse," sufficiently large to accommodate my friends and numerous customers. It is not sufficiently large, it is not sufficiently commodious, it is not sufficiently brilliant, it is not sufficiently elegant, it is not sufficiently well situated, it is not sufficiently well adapted to my establishment by those that are acquainted with the real character of this Balm, as a "Superior Medicine," I shall simply endeavor to give a brief statement of its usefulness, and flatter myself that its surprising efficacy will enable me to furnish such proofs of its virtues as will satisfy the most incredulous, that Consumption may and CAN BE CURED, if this medicine be resorted to in season.

POETRY.

MY COUNTRY'S FLAG.

My country's flag! how fair
Upon the summer air,
Stream out thy folds!
Thy stars and stripes recall
Days of our fathers' thrall,
Which, in her silent hall,
Fond memory holds.

Days when high deeds were done,
When hard fought fields were won
By mighty men;
When leagued invaders met
The sword and bayonet,
By strong hands firmly set
For freedom then.

How nobly in thy youth,
On thy broad field the truth
Resplendent shone,
"All men, of RIGHT, are free;
We will not bow the knee,
Save, glorious God, to thee,
To thee alone."

Thus did our fathers swear,
And sealed the oath with prayer,
O God to thee;
They made that promise good,
When "neath that flag they stood,
And watered, with their blood,
Fair freedom's tree.

Yet now my country's flag
Waves o'er SLAVES, who drag,
In pain and woe,
Oppression's damning chain;
And blood was shed in vain
On many a hill and plain,
Long years ago.

My countrymen, beware!
Our fathers' earnest prayer
Was heard on high,
When on the tented field,
Strong in the truth, they knelt,
And unto God appealed For Liberty.

Beware! for "God is just";
Repent! redeem your trust;
Unbind the chain.
Up! up! for liberty,
"Let the oppressed go free;"
Wash out, from sea,
In tears, the stain.

So play our land unroll
Her flag from pole to pole,
From east to west,
Sacred to truth and right,
Bearer of peace and light,
And, passed the earth's dark night,
Man, man the blest.

KNOWING FOLKS.

How wondrous wise some people are!
How vast their knowledge is!
They know the sun is not a star,
Nor the moon a piece of cheese.

They're very sure society
Consists of various sets,
And know that causes oftentimes
Are followed by effects.

They bore one with strange theories
Of sciences occult,
And know a process must be tried
To come to a result.

They tell you with a look profound—
Of course you must believe—
That often, in these wicked times,
Appearances deceive.

They think consistency should mark
The ways of those who teach;
And think—who does not?—they should Practice as well as preach.

They likewise have found out that he
Who quotes much holy writ,
And wears a face as long as your arm,
May be a hypocrite.

They know—good Heavens! what don't they know?
That honesty is rare;
That virtue is not always found
In maidens who are fair.

In every matter, great or small,
What wisdom they display;
They'll swear, that, if the wind is right,
"Twill be a rainy day.

And when a man in climbing falls
And breaks his neck—what then?
They know as sure as eggs are eggs,
He won't climb there again.

And when they hear a Yankee has
Been killed in Greece or Rome,
They doubt not he'd be living still,
If he had staid at home.

In short, they know quite every thing
That's sanctioned by the schools,
Except one little item—that Themselves are knowing fools.

ANECDOTES.

* Wife! why in the name of goodness, did you not make the washer-woman put starch in my shirt collar? * Why, my dear, I thought it a useless waste of the article as I can get your collar up so easy."

* Ma, said a little girl to her mother, "do the men want to get married as much as the women do?" * Pshaw, Puss, what are you talking about? * Why, ma, the women who come here are always talking about getting married, the men don't do so."

DR. FERNANDS' Vegetable Indian Arcanum,

Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pustules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impudence in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an injudicious use of Mercury. The complexion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernands, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernands, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that since it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernands himself; consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions, or even a small child, without doing him any harm, and since it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

Sir—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Inflammation of the Lungs, and Disease of the Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast enacting upon me the worst of all human diseases to which mortals are heir to—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines which were recommended, but from all of them I obtained not the least relief. About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.

From Ibrahim Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy Stone Bank.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark.

DEAR SIR—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernand's Vegetable Indian Arcanum.

I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health as he has stated, has been on the decline—that he has had frequent times of raising blood, to such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed convincing evidence that his health has been restored, and I have it from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernand's Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great flatulency, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dizziness of sight, palpitation of the heart, etc. I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,

IBRAHIM BARTLETT.

MISCELLANY.

THE WIDOW OF FIVE HUSBANDS.

There has recently arrived in Paris a young English lady, already the widow of her fifth husband. This remarkable chance, this uncommon series of widowhoods, is the more extraordinary, that the lady in question has not reached her twenty-fifth year. The history of her several marriages is so strange, both as a whole and in its particulars, that we should hardly dare to relate them, if the world had not already given credit to them. The saloons of the English, almost the only ones to remain open in this season of general desertion, dispute for the honor of this young widow, and from them we derive the following narrative of her conjugal adventures:

Mrs.  was not quite sixteen years old when she contracted her first marriage at Gretna Green. This matrimonial locality is sufficient evidence that it was a purely sentimental union. Two rivals disputed for her young affections; one was favored by her family, the other by herself. The latter, of course, was the successful one. In order to set aside all obstacles, our two young people had recourse to an elopement; and put in requisition the famous blacksmith, who unites enamored English couples, at a moment's warning, and without asking the consent of their relatives. The nuptial benediction had just been pronounced, when the unsuccessful rival appeared. He had followed the fugitives with all the speed his gold could obtain from the postillion; but the fugitives had a whole night's start of him; and the rival was only able to arrive just soon enough to be two hours too late.

'You have had a useless chase, my dear sir,' said the bridegroom, happy and proud of his success, 'for we are already married.'

'It may be so,' replied the other, 'but I have, at least, come in time to be revenged!'

In accepting this challenge, the bridegroom requested that the meeting might be postponed to the next day, but his jealous rival would not consent to afford him this gratification. They must repair at once to the spot, with the first seconds they could meet; the duel was fought with pistols, and the bridegroom struck by a ball in the forehead, fell never to rise again.

So Mrs.  became a widow two hours after the celebration of her first marriage. This adventure made so much talk, and led to so many scandalous rumors, that a second marriage only could allay them.—Besides, the young widow had known so little of the married life, that she very naturally desired to continue the chapter from the interesting point where it was so unfortunately broken off. This time, in order to efface, as much as possible, the consequences of her first fault, for which she had been so severely punished, Mrs.  submitted to the wishes of her parents in the choice of her second husband. They made for her a reasonable choice, selecting a man of mature years, and offering every possible guarantee. He was an old retired merchant, possessing a large fortune, honorably acquired. This was not, probably, the happiness dreamed of by a soul so poetical and so enamored; but then Mrs.  adapted herself to her new situation, and had not encountered those hollow deceptions and bitter deceits of life, before her husband found it necessary to attend to some business which required his presence on the continent. He left alone, and in crossing the channel, the steamboat was overtaken by a tempest, and dashed upon the rocks of the coast. This shipwreck made Mrs.  a widow for the second time.

In her misfortune she naturally looked about for consolation from others, which is anything but difficult to procure for a young widow, who united to her own personal charms those of a very considerable fortune. Among those attentive to her, she favored a young and showy youth, full of grace and wit, who seemed to her to unite all that would best console her for the loss of her husband. As soon as the necessary delays were over, the reign of the third husband commenced, under the most favorable auspices.

Nothing at the commencement seemed likely to mar the happiness of this union, but soon, even while devoted to his wife, the husband began to display vices beneath his graceful exterior. Gaming was his ruling passion, and he gave himself up to it with so much ardor that in a short time he had dissipated the rest of his own patrimony and the whole fortune of his wife. Then, no longer able to endure his shame and remorse, he shot himself.

Three successive calamities would have deprived Mrs.  of the courage to make a new conjugal trial, had not her pecuniary matters made it necessary to marry again. Completely ruined by her third husband, and with no inheritance to look forward to, marriage was the only resource by which she could escape the embarrassment and misery of want. There was no time to be lost; she must make the best of her advantages, and turn to a good account her youth and her attractions, to secure the best chance that offered. Our widow, therefore, bestirred herself; and heaven, as if to recompense her for her trials, sent her a husband of the first class.—a young, rich and handsome baronet, and quite famous on the turf. He had no passion for cards, but on the other hand he gave himself up with unrestrained ardor to horse racing, and in this exercise he made use of his purse and of his own person, staking large sums in bets, and risking himself with his horses in disputing for the prize in steeple chases. Fortune had not thus far affected his finances. His profits and losses were nearly balanced; but he was less successful as a rider than he was in his bets. His own person was less favored than his purse.—When he rode himself, he was more often thrown off his horse than able to alight of his own accord. So far from being discouraged, these falls rather stimulated him to do better; and this noble perseverance had already cost him several teeth, as well as an arm and some ribs broken. His family and friends hoped that marriage would make him a little more prudent, and for a short time he abstained from appearing on the turf, in order to devote himself entirely to his wife; but as soon as he became used to this peaceful felicity, his former passion returned, and he thought he could unite the pleasures of hymen and the race course. Several of the best riders in England had engaged in a contest at the Newmarket races; he joined them, mounted his fleetest horse, darted forward in the race, and fell, this time, so disastrously, that he was left dead on the spot.

The unfortunate sportsman had appointed his wife sole heiress of all his property, but his will contained several errors of form, which made it of doubtful effect. One of the relatives of the deceased disputed the will; the case was brought before the tribunals, and being ably managed against her, was threatening Mrs.  with new ruin, when her adversary himself proposed to stop their suit, and to unite their interests by marriage. This was the most prudent course; the widow adopted it, and changing her name for the fifth time, became the wife of a rich landed proprietor, who passed for the most intrepid fox hunter in Northumberland. The marriage had hardly been concluded six months, before the fifth husband, while hunting, was so imprudent as to leap a ditch with a loaded musket in his hand, which was accidentally discharged, when he received the whole contents in his breast. His death was instantaneous.

Such are the events which constitute the conjugal career of Mrs. . It is in consequence of these catastrophes that she is a widow for the fifth time, in the very morning of her life. But that which must seem the strangest of all, is that after thus having gained, or rather lost in the lottery of widowhood, she still persists in pursuing a chance which has so far been obstinately against her. The perseverance of this widow may be explained on several grounds. In the first place, having in each instance been married so short a time, she has had knowledge of only the bright days of marriage, the honeymoon, and has seen only the bright side; she has never seen the reverse of the medal; she has never experienced the disappointment of destroyed illusions; her husbands have never caused her any suffering, except by their death; even the gamster himself was so amiable and so kind, that, in spite of all his faults, his loss was bitterly regretted. And then, as people have become confused by the many different names which Mrs.  has borne, they have nicknamed her Mrs. Bluebeard, in cruel reference to her conjugal misfortunes. It is very natural she should wish to rid herself of this surname, by triumphing over fate! But her five widowhoods have somewhat cooled the ardor of her English admirers. Even the boldest experience a sort of superstitious terror; they fear lest they may meet the fate of their predecessors. Mrs.  has realized how much courage is necessary for any one to venture to marry her, and she has therefore come to Paris. This is certainly complimentary to the Parisians, and she will not be disappointed. As we have said, Mrs.  is not yet twenty-five years old, is exquisitely handsome, and her last husband left her, by a will in which no flaw can be detected, an income of one hundred and twenty thousand pounds a year. This is certainly more than enough to shut one's eyes to the chimerical dangers of the past. Mrs.  would easily find in Paris a man who, in spite of the apparent fatality, would esteem himself very happy to become her sixth husband.—Boston Times.

MILLERISM OUTDONE. A new sect of fanatics has appeared in Cincinnati. There are about sixty of them, more than half the number being females, and they are followers of a big, burly, half Indian, half Negro, formerly a Mormon, who has proclaimed himself Jesus Christ! He showed his disciples, one day last week, the scars of wounds in his hands and limbs, received on the cross! He does miracles with a golden rod, and professes that he was the destruction of Natchez by a whirlwind. He has already organized several apartments to his kingdom; a new Peter, Paul, &c. The members of the new religion are solemnly enjoined to secrecy, and hold meetings nightly.

CALIFORNIA. The climate of the country is represented as delicious, varying scarcely ten degrees the whole year round. There are two crops in California; but they are not always sure. When there is plenty of rain, that is, when it rains hard twice in the year, the crops are good and yield fifty and sixty fold; when it rains but little, the harvest is from twenty to twenty-five fold, and is then called a failure!

BIRTH IN A MARKET WAGON. An unusual occurrence happened in a market wagon in Fifth St., Cincinnati, a few evenings since.—The farmers wagons stand for numerous squares side by side, in this street, on certain evenings previous to market days. On this occasion quite a stir was seen around a particular wagon. The cause was ascertained to be the birth of a fine child belonging to the wife of the owner.

THE EYE-SIGHT.

It has long been our intention to say something about the eye-sight. This is of no small moment. The blessing of good eye-sight is invaluable. The pleasure of beholding the light of the sun, of walking and riding abroad guided by the light of the eye, of reading, and of seeing one's family and friends, is no small portion of the joy of life; and yet, many there are who greatly abuse their eyes. Persons should learn not only not to abuse their sight, but also to use it rightly, and take all proper measures to preserve it.

One of the greatest abuses of the eyes, now prevalent, is reading in the cars while they are going upon the railroad. This practice we are sensible, has been injurious to our own eyes. With a bundle of exchange papers in our pocket, we have frequently felt unwilling to lose so much time as we have been liable to, while passing from the city some eighteen or twenty miles in the country, as has lately been our custom. Hence, to save the time, we have resorted to reading, until we have perceived its ill effects. The unsteadiness of the cars, the different degrees of light through which the reader is so suddenly carried, and the constant effort to see, all tend to effect the eyes unfavorably. We advise all to avoid reading while riding.

We select the following from a work published several years since.

The preservation of the sight is an object of so much importance to every individual, whatever may be his profession or rank in society, that we have thought a few hints in relation to this subject might be productive of beneficial effects.

It is well known to the physician that nothing more certainly impairs the sense of vision than debauchery and excess of every kind. The individual, therefore, who would preserve his sight unimpaired, must avoid carefully every species of intemperance. This is an all-important rule, a neglect of which will render every other of but little avail.

A long continuance in absolute darkness, or frequent and protracted exposure to a blaze of light, equally injures the sense of vision.

Persons who live almost constantly in dark caverns or chambers, workers in mines, and prisoners who have been long confined in gloomy dungeons, become incapable of seeing objects distinctly excepting in a deep shade, or in the dusk of the evening. While, on the other hand, in various parts of the world, in which the light is constantly reflected from a soil of dazzling whiteness, or from mountains and plains covered with almost perpetual snow, the sight of the inhabitants is perfect only in broad day light, or at noon.

Those, also, who are much exposed to bright fires, as blacksmiths, glassmen, forgers, and others engaged in similar employments, are considered, by the best authorities, as most subject to loss of sight from catarrh.

All brilliantly illuminated apartments have a similar prejudicial effect upon the eyes, though, undoubtedly, not to the same extent. As a general rule, therefore, the eye should never be permitted to dwell on brilliant or glaring objects for any length of time. Hence in our apartments only a moderate degree of light should be admitted; and it would be of considerable advantage, particularly to those whose eyes are already weak, if in place of a pure white or deep red colour for the walls, curtains, and other furniture of our rooms, some shade of green were to be adopted.

Reading or writing in the dusk of the evening, or by candlelight, is highly prejudicial. The frivolous attention to a quarter of an hour at the decline of day, has deprived numbers of the perfect and comfortable use of their eyes for many years; the mischief is effected imperceptibly, the consequences are often irreparable.

There is nothing which preserves the sight longer, than always using, in reading, writing, sewing, and every other occupation in which the eyes are constantly exercised, that moderate degree of light which is best suited to them; too little strains them, too great a quantity dazzles and confounds them. The eyes are less affected, however, by a deficiency of light than by the excess of it. The former seldom does much if any harm, unless the eyes are strained by efforts to view objects to which the degree of light is inadequate—but too great a quantity has, by its own power, destroyed the sight.

The long-sighted should accustom themselves to read with rather less light, and with the book somewhat nearer to the eye than they ordinarily desire; while those that are short-sighted should, on the contrary, use themselves to read with the book as far off as possible. By these means both may improve and strengthen their vision, whereas a contrary course will increase its natural imperfections.

Bathing the eyes daily in cold or tepid water tends to preserve the integrity of their functions; provided, however, the individual does not immediately after such bathing enter a warm room or unnecessarily exert his sight.

THE FROG. "A frog," says Professor Pamp, "is an amphibious animal, as what lickers on cold water and consequently invented the teetotal society. He always walks with a jump, he does; and when he sits down, he has to stand up. Being a lover of native melodies, he gives forth concerts every night, he does, himself. He periwinks music for the million, which has been so called because it is usually heard in a mill-pond. He is a warmist what ain't so bad when briled on a griddle. No er-ree!"

SLEEP OF ANIMALS AND MAN. Most animals sleep more than man; some, indeed, for months—as the hibernating tribes of bats, marmots, and bears. Cats and dogs would seem to have the faculty at will, as have some idiots and persons of small intellect. The ideas, or impressions upon their minds, are so feeble, or so few, or are lost at such long intervals, that succession is lost for want of continuity; hence the organ retains imperfectly, and but for an instant, the image which the external senses have presented to it; weariness supervenes; unconsciousness follows; and lastly sleep, as a necessary consequence of inanition, is induced.

The absence of sleep cannot be long sustained. Damians slept on the rack; Luke in his iron crown; and a battalion of infantry have been known to slumber during a march! Muleteers frequently sleep on their mules, postboys on their horses, and seamen "on the high and giddy mast." "Massa call you," said a negro to his comrade who had fallen asleep near him: "Sleep has no massa," replied the wearied boy; and he was right. We may bear the privation of fire, food, and even drink, longer than we can the want of sleep.

FATTENING POULTRY. Thanksgiving day and Christmas are coming, and we must have the ducks and the geese and the "chicken fixings" ready. Some shut up their poultry in a close, dark place, and stuff them with dough made from Indian corn. Others let them run where they please, taking care to feed them well three times per day. This mode will not fatten them so fast as the close confinement mode. It is more healthy and congenial to the fowl; and the flesh will be likely to be more healthy. A writer in the Farmer's Library recommends this mode for fattening turkeys. He feeds them liberally in the morning, again at noon, with grain. "At night, before roosting, they should be fed with oat meal and skim milk." The best and fattest turkeys that we ever raised, were allowed to run at large, and were fed with the hogs, with warm swill, made of oat and pea meal boiled up with potatoes, pumpkins, &c.—Maine Farmer.

ONE FAULT. We have often noticed it, and have also heard it remarked by foreigners, that it is impossible almost to be polite to an American lady, for any little offer of courtesy from a stranger is looked upon as rudeness. There are a thousand little civilities incident to every day life which are practised in Europe, much to the comfort of the daughters of Eve, but here owing sometimes to a false modesty, are never thought of.—It is the duty of every gentleman to offer all assistance in his power to ladies, and they, to say the least, are but biting their own noses off, when they act with so little thought of what is for their own good.

TOBACCO. America consumes a vast quantity of tobacco in chewing. The manufactory which I visited appeared exclusively occupied in preparing it for this purpose. The first process devolves on the oldest negroes, who assort the different kinds of leaves. The stalks are then taken out, and the tobacco rolled on a table till it has acquired the necessary form. I shudder when I think of those excessively dirty hands which handled the very tobacco that was soon after to be chewed by elegant amateurs. The most disgusting part, however, of the whole preparation, was the manufacture of the tobacco of the inferior quality. It is only necessary to witness these preparations once to take a dislike to tobacco for life.—Arjuno.

LOVE SOMETHING. That man alone is happy who has something to love truly, sincerely. If he has no wife nor children, like Cowper, he may be attached to a dumb creature—a bird or a dog. James Montgomery has lived for years with no other companion than a cat. Our attachments are strong—and we are so constituted that our affections are drawn out upon something. A favorite tree or flower—or devotion to some particular service, may yield us exquisite pleasure. Few men who have some object to love, turn out to be depraved or wretched. They who have nothing to love are often out-cast from society, and die miserably at last.

SALT FOR HOGS. Hogs, during the process of fattening, should be supplied with salt as often as once a week. It is no less advantageous to them than to the ox, the cow, or the sheep, and when liberally given is a preventative of many diseases to which, from their continual confinement, and the effects of heavy food, they are inevitably exposed. Store hogs are also greatly benefited by a liberal provision of salt, and will generally partake of it once or twice a week, as eagerly and to all appearance with as good zest, as they do of corn meal. Charcoal is also highly salutary in its influences upon the health of swine.

A SAD REMEMBRANCE. It is said that Queen Victoria has a bracelet ornamented with four magnificent diamonds, formerly the property of female royalty, the death of each possessor having been unhappy and untimely. One of them belonged to the Princess Charlotte, two to Marie Antoinette, and the fourth to Mary Stuart.

CAUTION. Never enter a sick room in a state of perspiration, as the moment you become cool your pores absorb. Do not approach contagious diseases with an empty stomach, nor sit between the sick and the fire, because the heat attracts thin vapour.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

John A. Green, Editor.

ILLNESS OF EX-PRESIDENT ADAMS. We regret to learn that Mr. Adams was attacked with a paralytic shock on Thursday last, in Boston. He had just left his son's residence, in company with Dr. Parkman, and had not proceeded only a few rods when he felt unwell and immediately returned. We are happy to inform the community that it was a slight attack and that late yesterday afternoon he was quite comfortable and every prospect of an early recovery.

FIREMAN'S ENTERTAINMENT. On Saturday afternoon last, the Hydrant Engine Company of Milton, with their apparatus, paid a visit to the Tiger Company of this town. They were accompanied by a band of music, and the two companies dressed in their neat and appropriate uniforms marched through several of the streets. The exercise of playing was a mutual trial and highly enjoyed by the members. An excellent collation in abundance was prepared by the Tigers at their house, who, with their invited guests and friends, partook of the "fireman's fare" in good earnest without exhausting the supply. The evening was passed in friendly hilarity and the pleasures of the day will long be remembered by all the participants. The "fortaleste" which we gave was unanimously endorsed.

ENGINE TRIALS. We learn that the Tiger Engine Company of this town, will visit Weymouth Landing, on Tuesday morning next, at nine o'clock, and play with the Amazon Company of that village. The Tigers will be accompanied by a band of music.

FOUND GUILTY. George Warren Jerald, who for several years resided in this town, has been on trial during the present week, in Boston, charged with setting fire to his store for the purpose of defrauding an insurance company. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, but on account of the good character he had sustained for fifteen years past, they recommended him to the mercy of the court.

CHARGED WITH MURDER. The grand jury, in attendance with the Supreme Court of Maine, at Portland, have found an indictment against Charles R. Bragdon for the murder of Col. Healey, on the 11th of October, 1843. This noted character was arrested last summer in this town on the charge of liganey, and is now in confinement on several indictments found against him in this State.

FROM MEXICO. The enthusiasm in Mexico is represented as being very great. Two more battalions have been raised in the city of Mexico. The prisoners in the Castle of Perote had petitioned to be marched to meet the invaders. The ladies of Valahia had asked permission to join the army, to take care of the wounded. Great efforts are being made to raise money. Gen. Santa Anna remains rather inactive.

Accounts represent the American general to be perfectly cool—strongly fortifying Monterey—and ready at the proper time.

Com. Conner has made a second attack on Alvarado and again failed. It appears that his vessels did not answer the purpose—the attempt will be renewed. He sustained no loss, and some damage was done to the Mexicans.

VALUABLE WORK. John Hayward, Esq., who has devoted many years to the acquisition of important and interesting information, and who has already given to the public several works of intrinsic merit, has just published "A Gazetteer of Massachusetts," containing descriptions of all the Counties, Towns and Districts in the Commonwealth; also of the principal Mountains, Rivers, Capes, Bays, Harbors, Islands and Fashionable Resorts, to which is added statistical accounts of its agriculture, commerce and manufactures; with a variety of other useful information." This last production of Mr. Hayward is valuable beyond calculation, and will be so estimated by the public. The merchant, mechanic, farmer and laborer will find it their interest to possess a copy; to a family it is almost a library to assist in the education of children.

MINIATURES. We have seen some very well executed and strikingly correct colored miniatures, Daguerreotypes, executed by a Mr. Drake who is now sojourning for a few days at the Hancock House in this town. Call at his room, examine his work, and see if you recognize "familiar countenances."

CALL FOR TROOPS. The War Department of the United States has made a requisition for eight regiments of volunteer infantry with which to prosecute the war with Mexico—one from each of the States of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi, and one of mounted men from Texas. This force will comprise over seven thousand men.

ZEST. An excellent compound of spices, herbs, etc., has been prepared by W. K. Lewis & Son of Boston, for flavoring "hashes, stuffing, etc." It needs but a trial to approve of its virtues. Try it to flavor the stuffing of your Thanksgiving turkey. Their store is in Broad Street, and the article is called "ZEST."

DONATION PARTY. Several of our friends have suggested the idea of a "donation offering" at our "sanctum" the evening previous to Thanksgiving. We have no objection, of course, gentlemen.

LATER FROM EUROPE. The steamship Great Western arrived at New York on Monday, from Liverpool, whence she sailed on the 31st ult. There is no material difference in the state of business. Duties on foreign corn had reached their minimum. Flour was in demand without alteration in value.

Hon. George Bancroft and lady arrived at Liverpool on the 25th ult.

The steamship Acadia, from Liverpool, arrived at Boston on Tuesday, bringing news four days later. Mr. Bancroft and lady had arrived in London. The cotton market was quiet. The price of grain had fallen. The steamship Great Britain had not been got off but some hopes were entertained of being able to liberate her.

Considerable interest has lately been occasioned at Hamburg by the United States consul having detected, among a number of emigrants who presented their passports for his view, previous to their departure for the United States, ten ill-looking scoundrels, all dressed alike, who, on inquiry, were found to be convicts from Mecklenburgh Schuerin. The Mecklenburgh Government had given these convicts a sum of money sufficient to convey them to the United States, preferring that manner of getting rid of them to the expense of keeping them in prison at home.

EDITORS IN THE LEGISLATURE. Mr. Buckingham of the Boston Courier and Mr. Bryant of the Barre Patriot, will be members of the Senate. Mr. Hayden of the Boston Atlas, Col. Schouler of the Lowell Courier, Mr. Hawley of the Hampshire Gazette, Mr. Thibault of the Old Colony Memorial, Mr. Keyes of the Norfolk County American, and Mr. Beebe of the Westfield Standard, are elected to the House of Representatives. All are whigs except the last named.

THE "FURNACE CAR." The Old Colony Railroad Company, having running on their road a passenger car which is heated by a furnace. This is a real Yankee idea, and is said to be a great improvement on the usual method of heating by a stove, as the car is more evenly heated, and the room usually occupied by the stove is saved.

THE NEXT CONGRESS. The thirtieth Congress of the United States, to which members are now being elected in the different States, commences its term of service on the fourth of March next, and continues for two years. It will be a great object with each of the great political parties to gain a majority of its members, for upon it will not only rest the settling of all the questions which may agitate the country during the next two years, but it may also be called on, in the event of the electors failing to make a choice, to elect the next President.

POSSESSIONS IN NORTH AMERICA. The possessions of the various powers on the North American continent, including the United States, California and New Mexico, now stand as follows:

1846.	Miles.	Acres.
Russia,	750,000	480,000,000
British,	2,850,000	1,924,000,000
U. States,	4,934,744	1,578,388,100
Mexican,	605,256	579,368,540
C. America,	126,900	119,040,000
	9,226,000	4,220,616,000

CIDER. Here is a receipt worth to farmers the price of a newspaper, "Take a pint of pulverized charcoal and put in a bag; then put it into a barrel of new cider, and the cider will never ferment, never contain any intoxicating quality; and become more palatable the longer it is kept."

A WISE JUDGE AND GRAND JURY. At a Court in England, recently, the Grand Jury expressed their entire concurrence in a remark made by the Judge, that their services in the trifling cases brought before the Court are perfectly useless; and do not tend to the better administration of justice or to any public advantage. The learned judge said he was glad to find that there were so many respectable gentlemen who entertained the same opinion as himself on this subject. They might rely upon his forwarding their presentment to the proper quarter.

QUINCY WASHINGTONIAN SOCIETY. At the annual meeting of the Washington Total Abstinence Society, held in the Temperance Reading Room, on Monday evening, Nov. 16th, the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year.

President—Urbane Cudworth.
Vice Presidents—Josiah Adams and Ezra Badger.
Treasurer—Urbane Cudworth.

Recording Secretary—Theodore Kellogg.
Directors—George Follet, Ebenezer N. Field, John Page, Wm. R. Brown, Edmund S. Marsh, Dr. Geo. Newcomb, Edwin Marsh, James M. Wade, Nathan Ames, Edward Brackett, C. W. Hardwick.

The emperor of Russia has done a good thing; that is, condemned a rich Russian general at Warsaw, who imposed upon the daughter of a Polish nobleman by a false marriage, to give her all his property and dismissed him from office.

The trial of James M. Thompson, of the Great Western Express, for carrying a letter out of the mail, is now going on before the United States District Court in Boston.

Hon. Josiah Quincy, Jr., has been unanimously nominated as the Whig candidate for Mayor of Boston the ensuing year, and he has accepted the nomination.

The people of South Reading, at their town meeting last week, voted to petition the Legislature for a change of the name of the town to Lakeville, on account of the difficulties growing out of their post office address.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

A girl, fifteen years of age, at Georgetown, Kentucky, committed to memory accurately the whole New Testament in six weeks, at the same time attending to her other domestic duties.

Spurious fifty-cent pieces, neatly executed, are freely circulated in New York. The appearance of this spurious coin is quite engaging, but the sound is very much like that of bad doggerel—it jingles horribly.

The Duke of Wellington is now 77 years old; Joseph Hume 70; Lord Morpeth 44; Daniel O'Connell 72; Sir Robert Peel 58; Lord Stanley 46; Earl Grey 44; Lord Brougham 67; Lord Lyndhurst 74; Lord George Bentinck 44; the Duke of Richmond 53; the Duke of Rutland 68.

There is no truth in the stories that the Governor elect of New York is dangerously ill.

The Indians on one of the islands in Lake Huron, made the present year one hundred tons of maple sugar.

The crop of Indian corn grown this year in the Western States, is estimated at five hundred millions of bushels; and that of wheat at fourteen millions.

It is said that fifteen hundred patents have been granted in the United States, on improvements and modifications of Stoves.

At the storming of Monterey Gen. Worth took seven different batteries, in which he lost three hundred men.

A clergyman in Pittsburg, feeling that his salary was more than sufficient, applied to his congregation to have it reduced. This they refused to do; and the clergyman annually contributes a large portion of his salary for benevolent purposes.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY.

This medicine, prepared by a long experienced and skillful physician, tested and approved by a great number of intelligent, discriminating and respectable persons in various parts of the country, is now received and used with entire confidence and with great success by those afflicted with pulmonary complaints. It is also recommended as a valuable medicine for other diseases, such as colds, coughs, and particularly those which tend to consumption. Should its efficacy continue as it has thus far been proved in various obstinate cases, it will indeed be a most invaluable medicine.—Fall River Monitor, April 1846.

NOTICE.—The present issue is inadequate to accommodate my numerous customers. On the 1st of February next, I shall commence to erect a "Superior Warehouse," sufficiently large to accommodate my friends and numerous customers. "Large as the present house, it is not sufficiently large." "Spacious, it is not sufficiently spacious." "Brilliant in appearance, it is not sufficiently brilliant." This Gigantic House, the largest in the city, is to come down, and a larger, more spacious, and brilliant Establishment is to take its place. These names have been applied to my establishment by those that are acquainted with the real character of Oak Hall: such as "a Superior Mart," "a princely Warehouse," "a vast Trading Area," "a vast Establishment," "a Theatre of Unbounded Trade," "a stupendous Scheme," "an Extensive Market," "a Triumphant Achievement," "a Sublimity of Extraordinary Operations," "an Unapproachable Wonder." Such names will probably apply to my new structure which completed, I might well undertake to confine the vast ocean in the limits of our pond on Boston Common, as to carry on my large trade within the walls of these present limits. The public are aware that my triumphal statements are not overrated. The trade at my extensive Warehouse may be compared to a large Monster, whose bulk and mighty stature have become so great, that it requires a larger sphere for its present movements, erected in 1841, and situated in the most central and unobstructed part of the city, and yet it is far from being equal to the extent of my heavy trading operations. Sober and sensible men must have a larger house for the unobstructed movements of its enormous form. An Establishment for surpassing the present one is absolutely necessary, and one is to be erected that will surprise and delight all interested in my welfare.

G. W. SIMMONS,

Oak Hall, Boston.

P. S. Being obliged to move to make these superlative alterations, the large, Fresh Stock of Fashionable Ready-made Clothing, Piece Goods and Rich Furnishing Goods, adapted to the present Fall and coming Winter, amounting to upwards of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, will be closed up at prices much below the extreme low prices I have been selling. All the furniture of the present establishment for sale—Large Mirrors, Clocks, bachelors with Rich Cut Glass, Show Cases, &c. &c. Boston, Oct. 21.

DIED.

In Weymouth, 15th inst., George Fordyce Field, M. D. eldest son of Dr. N. Field, aged 24, a graduate of Harvard University the class of 1841.

Public Notice.

THE proprietors of the "Quincy Bookstore" present their most sincere acknowledgments to this community, for the patronage that has been bestowed upon their establishment, and respectfully solicit its continuance in proportion to their attention to business and to the wants of their customers, which they are confident can here be supplied as satisfactorily, in every respect, as at any other place.

To the purchasers of SCHOOL BOOKS, we say, that our list comprises all that are used in the various public and private schools in this and the neighboring towns, and that we will sell them singly to individuals, to Teachers for the supply of their schools, or to Traders for their own customers, at the lowest market cash prices.

Those in want of BLANK BOOKS are informed, that we can supply them with any style or quality, at prices varying according to the style, but all as low as any person can afford to sell them.

Our stock of STATIONERY is ample sufficient for the supply of this market, well selected, and will be sold at fair prices.

We invite all in want of MISCELLANEOUS, JUVENILE or TOY BOOKS, to examine our assortment before looking elsewhere, as we are sure that selections can be made that will be suitable.

We have also a great variety of Pocket Books, Wallets, Pocket and Pen Knives, Scissors, Thermometers, Combs, Brushes, with a general assortment of Fancy Goods which cannot be enumerated, but which we should be happy to exhibit to all who may call upon us.

We again call your attention to our CIRCULATING LIBRARY, from which at a moderate charge by the single volume, or year, we can furnish reading of a popular character.

We also receive subscriptions for, and supply all Periodicals, free of postage.

In the BINDERY connected with the Store the most careful attention will be given to binding Periodicals, Books, Manuscripts, &c.

To all we say "encourage home manufacture, and patronize home enterprise and industry in preference to foreign."

Quincy, Nov. 21.

Public Notice.

THE proprietors of the "Quincy Bookstore" present their most sincere acknowledgments to this community, for the patronage that has been bestowed upon their establishment, and respectfully solicit its continuance in proportion to their attention to business and to the wants of their customers, which they are confident can here be supplied as satisfactorily, in every respect, as at any other place.

To the purchasers of SCHOOL BOOKS, we say, that our list comprises all that are used in the various public and private schools in this city, and neighboring towns, and that we will sell them singly to individuals, to Teachers for the supply of their schools, or to Traders for their own customers, at the lowest market prices.

Those in want of BLANK BOOKS are informed, that we can supply them with any style or quality, at prices varying according to the quality, but all as low as any person can afford to sell them.

Our stock of STATIONERY is amply sufficient for the supply of this market, well selected, and will be sold at fair prices.

We invite all in want of MISCELLANEOUS, JUVENILE or TOY BOOKS, to examine our assortment before looking elsewhere, as we are sure that selections can be made that will be suitable.

We have also a great variety of Pocket Books, Wall-Pocket and Pen-Knives, Scissors, Thermometers, Combs, Brushes, with a general assortment of Fancy Goods which cannot be enumerated, but which we shall be happy to exhibit to all who may call upon us.

We again call your attention to our CIRCULATING LIBRARY, from which, at a moderate charge by the single volume, or year, we can furnish reading of a popular character.

We also receive subscriptions for, and supply all Periodicals, free of postage.

In the LIBRARY connected with the Store the most careful attention will be given to binding Periodicals, old Books, Music, &c.

To all we say "encourage home manufacture, and patronize home enterprise and industry in preference to foreign."

POETRY.

HYMNS

Sung Nov. 13, 1846, in the First Congregational Church, Quincy, on occasion of closing the Sunday School for the season.

HYMN I.

C. M. DODDIDGE, ALTERED.

1. Hark! the glad sound! the Savior comes!
The Savior promised long!
Let every heart prepare a throne,
And every voice a song.
2. On him the Spirit largely poured,
Exerts its sacred fire;
Wisdom and might, and zeal and love,
His holy breast inspire.
3. He comes, from thickest films of vice
To clear the mental ray,
And on the eyeballs of the blind
To pour celestial day.
4. He comes, the steps of youth to guide
In wisdom's pleasant way;
The lambs he gathers to his side,
And holds them lest they stray.
5. Our glad hosannas, Prince of Peace,
Thy welcome shout proclaim,
And infant tongues shall join to bless
The Savior's honored name.

HYMN II.

78 M. ORIGINAL.

1. Hark! the gentle Shepherd's voice!
"Little children, come to me."
"In that word our souls rejoice,
And we give our hearts to thee."
2. "Take my yoke, and of me learn,
I will show you what is good."
"Savior! I, too, to thee will turn,
Feed our minds with heavenly food."
3. "None can to the Father come,
But by me the Living Way."
"Savior! guide us to our home,
And the Father's love display."
4. "I was once like you a child,
And a child's suggestion knew."
"Teach us, Savior! to be mild, Kind, obedient and true."
5. "Cup and cross and thorny crown
Tell what sorrows I have known."
"Savior! send thy spirit down,
Make thy patience all our own."
6. "Though in death's repose I lay,
I've ascended to the skies."
"Savior! thou hast led the way, Teach our spirits how to rise."

CLOSING HYMN.

88 & 78 M. TOPHAT'S COL.

1. Lord, dismiss us with thy blessing,
Hope and comfort from above;
Let us each, thy peace possessing,
Triumph in redeeming love.
2. Thanks we give, and adoration,
For thy gospel's joyful sound;
May the fruits of thy salvation
In our hearts and lives abound.
3. Who may share this great salvation?
Every pure and humble mind;
Every kindred, tongue, and nation,
From the dross of guilt refined.
4. Make us gentle, kind and lowly;
Teach us, Father, by thy word,
How we may be good and holy,
Like to Jesus Christ our Lord.

ANECDOTES.

Two Irishmen in attempting to draw water from a well some fifty feet deep, lost the bucket. After consulting, it was agreed that one should take hold of the rope and the other by the windlass should "lower him down." At the word "ready" off it went, sure enough! the man at the helm losing his hold on the windlass! How long Jimmy was travelling to the "regions below," is a matter of conjecture. The man above was the first to break silence, who after straining his eyes to catch a glimpse of his comrade, exclaimed, "Oh be— dear Jimmy, an did ye let anywhere?" The reply of the man below, bounding in the water, was equally ludicrous; "Sure," he blubbered out, "larring the weather, it's only the bottom I struck sure!" Jimmy thinks if it wasn't for the honor of riding he'd rather go on foot.

"Husband," said an affectionate wife to a coolish 'bother half, who was lying in bed with his nose to the wall, "don't you sometimes get wild lying so long in one position?" "I don't know," muttered Drowsy, "I don't know, Histy, but lying in one position is as good as turning over and laying in two positions."

"Fred," said a wag to a conceited fop, I know a beautiful creature who desires to make your acquaintance." "Glad to hear it—fine girl—good taste—struck with my appearance, I suppose, eh?" "Yes, very much so. She thinks you would make a capital playmate for her poodle dog."

"What makes taters so high?" inquired an old lady of the market man, as she was purchasing. "Oh, the war, ma'am." "But do they fire taters at the Mexicans?" responded the old lady; "why that is funny."

Snooks coming home late one night, his wife standing behind the door caught him, and gave him a severe kiss. The husband getting angry gave her a hard clew. "O dear! Mr. Snooks is it you?" I thought it was another man!"

"Take off your bonnet, madam." "I had rather not, sir." "Zounds and himstone, madam! take off your bonnet, I say." "In public assemblies, sir, women generally cover their heads. Such, I am sure, is the custom elsewhere, and therefore, I will not take off my bonnet." "Do you hear that, gentlemen? She pretends to know more about these matters than the judge himself! Had you not better, madam, come and take a seat on the bench?" "No, sir, thank you, for I really think there are old women enough there already."

Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrophula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pustules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Imprudence in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an impudic use of Mercury. The completion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernands, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practising as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernands, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernands himself; consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions, or even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the incredulous invalid that no more has been said in its favor than its virtues safely warrant. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine. To prevent imposition, each bill of directions accompanying the medicine will be signed by J. K. Fernands, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernands' Medicine:

Sir—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Inflammation of the Lungs, and Disease of the Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast en-tailing upon me the worst of all lung and liver diseases to which mortals are heir to—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines which were recommended, but from all of them I obtained not the least relief. About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.

To Mr. Joseph J. Clark:

DEAR SIR—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum. I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health as he has stated, has been on the decline—that he has had frequent turns of raising blood, to such a degree as to cause his friends to be greatly alarmed. For the year past I have noticed convincing evidence that his health has been restored, and I have it from his own lips that he attributes his recovery, entirely to the use of Dr. Fernands' Medicine.

I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great flatulency, with a cold headache, and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dizziness of sight, palpitation of the heart, &c. I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.

Yours, truly,

MISCELLANY.

THE LESSON.

Three young ladies were seated in a rich apartment. They were the Misses Amanda and Emma Ellis, and their cousin Delilah Carlton. The latter was engaged in the womanly occupation of sewing; the two former in discussing, critically, a ball at which all three had been present the preceding evening.

"I do n't like that Mr. Barton at all," said
Miss Amanda, continuing the conversation.

"Nor me either," responded Miss Emma, who was the eldest.

"And why not, cousin," asked Delilah, "I am sure he is handsome enough, is he not?"

"Yes; but—"

"But what, coz?" said she to Emma, who had spoken last. "Surely his manners are pleasing, and his language polished, without affectation."

"Yes, yes, but for all that he is vulgar," said
Emma, pettishly, "vulgar in his ideas."

"Vulgar!" exclaimed Delilah, "you must again allow me to differ with you, coz," she continued, looking into her cousin's face with a winning smile. "I think he is quite refined, more so than Mr. Rice or Mr. Brown, and many of the other gentlemen."

"Only think of comparing Mr. Barton with Mr. Brown, the gentleman!" exclaimed Miss Amanda Ellis. "Why, Mr. Barton is a mechanic."

"Well, suppose he is, dear," said her cousin,
"does that make him vulgar, or less respectable? For my part, I think a mechanic can be as much of a gentleman, (in the true sense of the word,) as a millionaire."

"Well, I declare, cousin Lile, you do have some of the funniest notions," said Miss Amanda, "just for all the world like pa; he thinks one man just as good as another, even though he be a laborer."

"Yes," said Emma, "I do wish he would be a little more circumspect, and find better company for his daughters than mechanics. It is his fault that Mr. Barton comes here; he gives him such pressing invitations. I suppose he wants me or you, Amanda. Would n't it make a fine paragraph for the papers? Miss Amanda, (or Emma,) daughter of James Ellis, merchant, to Mr. Charles Barton, mechanic.
Oh, dear," said the spoiled beauty, (for both sisters possessed great personal attractions), throwing herself back upon the sofa, and laughing heartily, "as also did her sister."

"Well, well, girls," said Mr. Ellis, who, hidden behind the half open door of the apartment, had been an unobserved listener to the conversation, and who now entered the room, "you may laugh now, but you may live to regret that you did not try to obtain Mr. Barton for a husband. Mark that!" and the old gentleman, taking up his hat, left the apartment.

"I declare, if there is not Mr. Barton on the steps!" exclaimed Emma, who was looking through the blinds. "Come, come," she continued, addressing her sister, "let us go up stairs into the other parlor, and leave cousin Lile to entertain him; it will be a pleasure to her, she is partial to mechanics," and the sisters left the room.

The object of the foregoing conversation was a young man whom Mr. Ellis had introduced to his daughters and niece, some months before, as a master mechanic. But, unlike the father who valued a man for his character and not for his money, the Misses Ellis were great sticklers for respectability, their standard for which was riches, and the consequence was, as we have seen, that Mr. Barton did not stand any too high in their good graces. Mr. Ellis knew this false estimate of respectability was a predominant fault in his daughters' character, and he determined to give them a practical salutary lesson. How he succeeded, the sequel of our story will show.

A few moments after the sisters left the room,
Mr. Barton entered. He was about the middle height, with a fine figure, regular features, and intelligent countenance. His eyes were of a deep blue, his eye-brows finely arched, and his forehead high and white, from which the jet black hair was pushed back, displaying its fine proportions. He was certainly a handsome man, which fact even the Misses Ellis did not attempt to deny, and the ease and politeness with which he greeted Miss Carlton, spoke his claim to that which the lady herself awarded to him—the title of a gentleman.

He was soon seated and in conversation with Delilah. Delilah Carlton was a charming girl.
It is true she did not possess the exquisite proportions and regular features of her two cousins, but there was ever a sunny smile upon her face, and a cheerful spark in her clear, light blue eye, and she had such light and bounding spirits that made her appear as beautiful as her cousins; at least, so thought Mr. Barton, as he gazed upon her bewitching countenance. How much better, thought he, would it be to possess her for a wife, dependant as she is upon her uncle, and powerless as she would be, than either of the Misses Ellis with their spoiled tempers and fortunes.

Thinking this, it is to be wondered at that he left her with a half formed determination to win her love if it lay within his power?

When Delilah appeared at the dinner table that day, many were the meaning and very inquisitive glances of her cousins cast upon her.
At last, unable to restrain their loving habits of "running" their cousin, they spoke.

"I hope you have spent a very pleasant morning, cousin," said Miss Amanda, with a meek, arch look.

"A very interesting tete-a-tete, was it not?"
whispered Emma, across the table.

"I spent the morning very pleasantly," answered Delilah, blushing slightly.

"O! I dare say," said Emma, sarcastically.
"I suppose he gave you a dissertation on mechanics, did he not, coz?"

"Well, and suppose he did?" said Mr. Ellis, who had been listening patiently, but into whose honest face the color now rose. "Is it not better to listen to that than the senseless conversation, and sickly sentiment, drawled out in affected tones by the foplings, half men, half monkeys, who disgrace humanity?" and the old man cast such a look upon his daughters as made them quail beneath it.

"But never mind, Lile," he continued in a softer tone, patting his niece's rosy cheek.
"never mind. Mr. Barton is worth three or four such would-be-gentlemen as Mr. Rice, and Mr. Brown, and in more ways than one. Mark that, girls! He is worth two or three such, in more ways than one."

The last sentence he addressed to his daughters.

Days, weeks, and months, rolled by, and Mr.
Barton had become a frequent visitor at Mr.
Ellis'. It was very evident that he was paying particular attention to Delilah Carlton, and it was also plain to see that they were not unacceptable. This fact furnished an ample subject for the sisters' sarcastic remarks.

As for their father, whenever they indulged in them in his presence, a knowing smile would play upon his face, and he would repeat to them his assertion, that they would some day wish that they had obtained Mr. Barton for a husband.

Thus things continued for some time. At length, one morning, about three months subsequent to the period when our story commences, Mr. Ellis entered the parlor where his daughters were sitting, with a light step and sparkling eye.

"Well, girls, what do you think of it?" said he, rubbing his hands in glee.

"What?" asked both young ladies in a breath.

"The wedding we're going to have."

"The wedding? what wedding?"

"Your cousin's."

"Delilah's?"

"Yes, she is going to honor the mechanic with her hand. Now what do you think of it, eh?"

"I do n't think much of it," said Miss Emma,
with a toss of her head.

"Nor I," said Amanda.

"You do n't, eh? Well, suppose I was to tell you that she was going to be married to a man worth two hundred thousand dollars, would that alter your opinions?"

"Why, what do you mean, pa?"

"Listen! and I will tell you, girls," said the old gentleman, bending upon his daughters a grave and somewhat stern look. "The father of Mr. Barton, to whom your cousin is soon to be married, was an old friend of mine; we were playmates in boyhood. He was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade about the same time I entered the counting house. Soon after he had finished learning his trade, he went to Baltimore, and there started business for himself, and was married. Being possessed of genius, and having a good education for a master mechanic and builder, he soon became an architect, and subsequently amassed a large fortune.
Knowing the reverses of fortune to which all are liable, he resolved to make his only son, Charles, a good architect, so that if ever the "fickle dame" should desert him, he would have wherewith to earn his daily bread. He succeeded. A year or two ago he died, leaving his whole fortune, his wife being already dead, to Charles, his only child. About six months ago, Charles came to this city on a visit. He said he had never yet met with a young lady he thought worthy of calling his wife; that he could find enough who would marry him for the sake of his money, but that such a one he would never marry."

"I told him I would introduce him to some of our city ladies, and see if he could not find one amongst them to suit him. He required that I should conceal his wealth, and introduce him only as a master mechanic. I acquiesced, and knowing your false estimate of respectability, I embraced the opportunity of teaching you a lesson, which I sincerely hope will have a salutary influence. I knew when I brought him home with me, and introduced him, that neither of you would be chosen, because I knew you would not stoop so low as to wed a master mechanic, but the event that will soon take place I easily foresaw. Your cousin knew nothing whatever of his wealth until to-day. I see you look surprised, girls, but did I not tell you that you would be sorry some day you did not obtain him for a husband? And did I not tell you that he was worth two or three such ninnny-hammers as Mr. Rice and Mr. Brown, in more ways than one? Remember, girls, that wealth is a false standard by which to judge respectability and worth. Not that a rich man may not be respectable, but that very often he who earns his daily bread by the sweat of his brow is more of a gentleman than he who counts his thousands."

And they did remember it; for in after years they showed in their choice of husbands that they had not forgotten their honest old father's LESSON.

To be always contented—consider that you will never in this life be free from annoyances, and that you may as well bear them patiently
as fret about them.

SLIGHT CIRCUMSTANCES.

Sir Walter Scott walking one day along the banks of the Yarrow, where Mungo Park was born, saw the traveller throwing stones into the water anxiously watching the bubbles that succeeded. Scott inquired the object of his occupation. "I was thinking," answered Park,
"how often I had tried to sound the rivers in Africa, by calculating how long a time had elapsed before the bubbles arose to the surface.
It was a slight circumstance, but the traveller's safety sometimes depended upon it. In a watch the mainspring forms a portion of the works, but it impels and governs the whole. So it is in the machinery of human life—a slight circumstance is permitted by the Divine Ruler to derange or to alter it; a giant falls by a pebble, a girl at the door of an inn changes the fortune of an empire. If the nose of Cleopatra had been shorter, said Pascal, in his epigramic and brilliant manner, the condition of the world would have been different. The Mahommedians have a tradition, that when their prophet concealed himself in Mount Shur, his pursuers were deceived by a spider's web, which covered the mouth of the cave. Luther might have been a lawyer, had his friend and companion escaped the thunderstorm at Erfurt; Scotland had wanted her stern reformer, if the appeal of the preacher had not startled him in the Chapel of St. Andrew's Castle; and if Mr. Granville had not carried, in 1746, his memorable resolution as to the expedience of charging certain
'stamp duties' on the plantations in America, the British world might still have bowed to the Western sceptre. Cowley might never have been a poet, if he had not found the 'Fairy Queen' in his mother's parlor. Opie might have perished in mute obscurity, if he had not looked over the shoulder of his young companion, Mark Oates, while he was drawing a butterfly; Giotto, one of the early Florentine painters, might have continued a rude shepherd boy, if a sheep, drawn by him upon a stone, had not attracted the notice of Cimabue.

BAD COMPANY.

The associations young men are very apt to form in large and growing places, result in disgraceful and melancholy ends. Bad company is the pest of society, and while it ruins thousands, it likewise brings pain and misery to many a fond and affectionate parent. Young men easily weaned from their once loved homes, must lack firmness of mind, and cannot be well acquainted with the deceptions of the world; they would but listen to the voice of experience, and be more willing to obey

POETRY.

BE FIRM! BE TRUE!

Statesman! on the giddy height
 Whence, at will, thou swayest men,
 Steals a darkness o'er the sight?
 Moves a cloud within thy ken?
 Be firm! Be true!

And though the hurrying heavens grow black,
 Unfailing light shall gild the track.

Orator! amid the crowd,
 Moved like waves at thy behest,
 Hear'st thou that which shouted loud,
 Were a terror to thy breast?
 Be firm! Be true!

Then fall what may upon thine ear,
 Thy heart shall feel no coward fear.

Christian! of the faith of Rome!
 Do ye hear a hissing scorn
 Rising against you, in the home
 Of your new adoption born?
 Be firm! Be true!

If God is with ye what care ye,
 Though hate roar as a raging sea?

Christen of the faith that laid
 Rome's old bondage in the dust!
 Fearst thou that thou art betrayed?
 Feelest thou that this quarrel's just?
 Be firm! Be true!

Fall, if it must be, in the strife,
 But yield not thou one inch for life!

Stranger from a clime abroad,
 From a land beyond the sea,
 Deem'st thou, in thy heart, that God
 Gives a home right here to thee?
 Be firm! Be true!

And though it cost thee all thou hast,
 Assert that right while life shall last.

Freeman! born upon the soil,
 Fully, fairly, deemest thou
 Alien arts would make a spoil
 Of this land of freedom now?
 Be firm! Be true!

Resolve on what will shield from harm,
 And do it with no laggard arm.

Man! of every clime and creed!
 With a high and holy trust,
 Dost thou on thy mission speed,
 Seeking but the right, the just?
 Be firm! Be true!

Though sorely tried in many a way,
 Despair not!—God will bring thy day!

A THANKSGIVING HYMN.
 Father of earth and heaven,
 Whose arm upholds creation,
 To thee we raise the voice of praise,
 And bend in adoration.

We praise the power that made us;
 While every day that rolls away
 Thy gracious care confesses.

A thank will be in readiness to take lumber, etc., to and from the Mill, and will attend to Jobbing generally about town.
 HENRY G. PRATT.
 Quincy, April 11.

Life is from thee, blessed Father;
 From thee our breathing spirits;
 And thou dost give to all that live
 The bliss that each inherits.

Day, night, and rolling seasons,
 And all that life embraces,
 With bliss are crowned, with joy abound,
 And claim our thankful praises.

ANECDOTES.

A quick witted toper went into a bar room and called for something to drink. "We'll give you a glass, and then if you want to buy a cracker, we'll sell it to you for three cents." "Very well," said the Yankee customer, "hand down your decanter." The good cutter was handed down, and our hero took a stiff loan, when turning to depart, the unsuspecting landlord handed him the dish of crackers, with the remark "you'll buy a cracker." "Well, no, I guess not; you sell me too dear; I can get lots on 'em five or six for a cent any where else."

"What do you wish to get in your two bottles?" said a grocer to a little boy as he entered his store. "Mother wants a cent's worth of your best yeast." "Which bottle will you have it in?" "I'll have it in both. And will you, if you please, put a cork in them? Can't you send it home, 'cause I'm going another way?" "Well, where's your cent?" "Mother says you must charge it."

As the Duke of Clarence was once sitting to Northcote, he asked the artist if he knew the Prince Regent. "No," was the brief reply. "Why," said the Duke, "my brother says he knows you." "Oh," answered Northcote, "that's only his brag."

The Rev. Daniel Isaac was both a great wag and a great smoker. "Ha! there you are," cried a lady, who surprised him one day with a pipe in his mouth, "at your idol again." "Yes, madam," replied he, "burning it."

DR. FERNANDS' Vegetable Indian Arcanum,

FOR THE CURE OF Consumption and Liver Complaint, Inflammation of the Lungs and Spitting of Blood, Scrofula, Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Rheumatism, Gout, Obsolete Cutaneous Eruptions, Pimples or Pustules on the Face, Female Weakness, Jaundice, Piles, Impudence in Life, Enlargement and Pain in the Bones, and Diseases arising from an injudicious use of Mercury. The complexion is greatly improved by this medicine.

THIS is a preparation which Dr. Fernands, who is an Indian of the Cherokee nation, has used with great success in the above complaints, practicing as he has for many years as an Indian doctor among several tribes. Dr. Fernands, who prepares this medicine, does not contend that it will cure all the diseases which the human system is liable to experience, but feels safe in assuring the public that when it has been taken according to his directions, it has never failed, in any of the complaints above mentioned, of effecting a speedy and effectual cure. This medicine is entirely of a vegetable nature, being a compound of roots and herbs collected by Dr. Fernands himself; consequently it is a preparation which may be taken by those of the most delicate constitutions, or even a small child, without the least fear as to its results upon the system. One bottle will convince the incredulous invalid that no more has been said in its favor than its virtues safely warrant. Many respectable physicians have used, and even prescribed, this valuable medicine.
 To prevent imposition, each bill of directions accompanying the medicine will be signed by J. K. Fernands, in his own hand writing, and also by his only authorized Agent for the New England States, J. K. FERNANDS, Indian Physician.
 JOS. J. CLARK, Agent for New England States.

CERTIFICATES.
 From W. Abercrombie of Quincy, Merchant Trader.
 To Mr. Joseph J. Clark, Agent of Dr. Fernands' Medicine.

SIR—I have been afflicted at different times, for more than four years, with Spitting of Blood, Inflammation of the Lungs, and Disease of the Liver, causing general debility in my system, and evidently fast enailing upon me the worst of all human diseases to which mortals are heir to—Consumption. I have in vain tried many medicines which were recommended but from all of them I obtained not the least relief. About eighteen months ago, I was induced to try Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.
 WYMAN ABERCROMBIE.
 Quincy, April 3d, 1843.

From Ibrahim Bartlett, Cashier of the Quincy Stone Bank.
 To Mr. Joseph J. Clark.

DEAR SIR—I am gratified to learn that you are about to establish a place for the sale of Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum.
 I do most cheerfully certify that I am well acquainted with Mr. Wyman Abercrombie, and believe that his general health as he has been induced to try Dr. Fernands' Vegetable Indian Arcanum, by the use of which medicine I have been restored to good health, and have not raised any blood since the use of the first bottle of this excellent preparation.
 I feel it my duty to say a word or two in favor of this valuable medicine. I have for more than twenty years been afflicted with a complaint which at times is very distressing, great flatulency, with a cold heaviness and tightness of the chest, extreme headache, dimness of sight, palpitation of the heart, etc.
 I am free to say, that since I have used this preparation which has cured my friend, I feel greatly relieved, and have strong hopes, after following the directions, of being restored to health. I think very highly of the medicine, and am confident that it will prove efficacious in the cure of many diseases, if once resorted to.
 Yours, truly,
 IBRAHIM BARTLETT.

MISCELLANY.

THE UNEXPECTED RETURN.

A cheerless looking apartment in a second story back building, used as a sitting room, carpeted with a homely imperial, and furnished with a pair of divines, half dozen mahogany chairs, two of which were remarkably easy, the remaining four as remarkably uneasy—a mirror, and underneath a centre-table, on which were scattered several magazines, a half finished letter, and a scrap of unhemmed ruffling—a stove after the radiator fashion, and a solar lamp on the marble stand near, shedding its faint rays over the deserted room;—imagining this, you have before you, as near as I can give it, the apartment where Mr. and Mrs. Gregory Russell had their first quarrel. The honeymoon not having passed as yet, I think it was entirely too soon to begin, but I suppose they were of a different opinion, or else the quarrel would have been postponed to a more suitable time. Two hours had passed since they left the room: Mr. Russell to march down stairs, and bang the street door after him, and his better half to ascend the remaining flight, and weep over her abuses in silence.

Abuses no doubt they were, and who would dare say otherwise, when I tell them that Mr. Russell had so soon had the audacity to insist upon her sending regrets to a party which she was extremely anxious to attend, and not only that, but had given her to understand that henceforth she was seldom to think of attending Concerts, Operas, or any places of public amusement, and never without his own special escort. What wonder then if the three weeks' bride, who had never been in the habit of consulting any other mentor than her own wishes, had called such interdictions "barbarous" and "unkind of," and even went so far as to express a wish that she had not married "such a brute of a man."

This was the case, and it was this that had sent the husband out in search of a quieter and less annoying place, than his own home had proved to be that night. One word brought on another, and when Mrs. Russell wished that she had found some more congenial to her tastes; the husband quietly arose, took his hat and politely told her to find some one else.

Two hours had passed, and the clock struck ten, when Mrs. Russell, with swollen eyes, went down to the sitting room, to warm her shivering form, for she concluded such a wretch of a man was not worth freezing herself to death for. She drew the easiest of the two easy-chairs to the stove, and sat down very haughtily, as though she was conferring a great honor upon the room by her presence. And indeed you would not believe how cheerful that deserted room looked after she came into it. If she had only looked a little happier, it would have been quite a pleasant little room. I wonder now that I called it dreary.

An hour passed on, and the hands of her time-piece pointed to eleven o'clock. Her countenance had changed during that hour—the expression of haughty anger had given place to a resigned look, and I think if Mr. Russell had come in then, she would have said—

"Gregory, you have been very unkind to me; but I will forgive you this once, if you will promise to let me go to that party."

But he did not come, and the lady went on thinking, and the watch went on tick-ticking until the hands pointed to twelve. Then the little lady rose, and the resigned expression had given place to a very anxious, loving look, and she paced the apartment slowly with clasped hands—a tear now and then falling from her heavenly blue eyes. What an Eden of a room that little apartment has become. I don't think I noticed those snowy embroidered curtains before, but now she is lifting them, and peering so far out in the darkness, they really look beautiful, falling like drapery about her. If Mr. Russell comes in now, no doubt she will say—"My love, I have been very anxious about you; why did you stay so late?" I don't think she would make any allusions to the party now.

Again the watch was drawn from its hiding place, the hands pointed to one. She threw herself upon the lounge, and burst into tears. What a pity she should dim the glorious lustre of her eyes again. She thought she heard the street door open, and she sprung from the lounge to the sitting-room door but her fancies had deceived her, and she went to her seat murmuring—

"Oh! if he would only come back, I would never wish to go away again—it was I that was to blame; dear, dear Gregory, where can he be?"

I knew it would come to this. She really does look beautifully now, notwithstanding her long eye-lashes are bathed in tears, and the lids droop heavily with their weight. The watchman cried—"Past two o'clock," and now the key turned in the street door, and the door opened and shut again; she heard a footfall; another door opened and shut; was he not coming to her? Another footstep, and then a quick succession of them up the stairs. She opened the door, and in the dim light of the hall, saw a stranger form ascending the staircase. She would have screamed, but the power of utterance seemed denied her, and like a marble statue she stood to wait her fate.

"Mrs. Russell, I presume?" said the stranger.

The gentlemanly, pleasant way in which he addressed her, somewhat relieved her of her extreme fright, and she found her voice sufficiently to enquire if any accident had happened to her husband?

"Oh, no, Madam," he replied, "I come on quite a different errand; I just left your husband in very comfortable quarters, where he will probably remain for the present."

Then seeing that she seemed very much agitated, he added—

"But you need not be in the least alarmed, for I can give you the best evidence that he knows of my visit, even sent me to pay you a call."

So saying, he produced the night-key, at the sight of which Mrs. Russell turned very pale and shuddered from head to foot.

"Do not be unnecessarily agitated my dear lady, but come into the sitting-room with me, while I explain the cause of my visit, which you no doubt think a very strange and unreasonable one."

So saying, he took hold of her hand to lead her into the little snugery, when a smart blow across the mouth with the other hand reminded him of the propriety of keeping at a distance.

"I beg your pardon, lady, I meant no offence," said the stranger, with a good natured smile, as he threw off the Spanish cloak, and cap, which had almost hid his person and face from view, disclosing the figure and countenance of an elegantly formed and noble-looking young man of five-and-twenty. There was a quiet humor resting in the large dark eye, and a half smile hovering about the mustachoid lip, that told how capably the stranger was enjoying his part of the affair; while the troubled countenance and dilated pupils of Mrs. Russell's eyes showed that the passing moments were as hours of agony to her. Still the two looked as if made for each other, both so young and beautiful—and they are not unlike in features. The stranger broke the silence.

"My name is Harry, yours is Bertha, I think."

This time Mrs. Russell fixed her eyes on his, nodded an assent, and turned away with a sigh.

"I think we are not unlike, that is, I think our tastes will be more congenial than yours and your husband's are. I am very fond of quietude, and not at all given to domestic life. If you would like to come and live with me, I will promise to devote every evening to amusement. We will suit ourselves in our choice of entertainment, and leave this hum-drum husband of yours to suit himself. You are very handsome to my thinking, and I am willing to make the arrangement. What say you, Bertha?"

"My God, this is too much!" and Bertha Russell rose from her seat.

The stranger would have stopped her, but before he divined her purpose, she had opened the door, glided out, closed it after her, and turned the key upon him. At the same moment a merry laugh from within the room, and a wild shriek from without, rang through the house, and Bertha, exhausted with those hours of watching, sank lifeless upon the stairs. The fright of the last hour had unstrung every delicate nerve, and set free the grieved spirit from its beautiful cage—but it soared not far from its earthly dwelling place, for when Bertha felt her husband's arms about her, and his warm kisses on her lips, the marble face lost its rigidity, the heart pulse beat but the more quickly, for its slight cessation, and from the dark blue eyes the soul looked forth with renewed vigor after its wanderings.

"My husband! my husband! was it a dream?"

Mr. Russell lifted Bertha in his arms, turned the key of the door, and there, before them, still stood the stranger—his handsome face rather more demure than when Bertha locked him in. Mrs. Russell's whole frame quivered, and she clung to her husband with a tighter grasp.

The stranger stepped close to them, and bending his head, said—

"Bertha, has your own brother Henry altered so much in the last five years, that you have not one smile of recognition for him?"

"Harry, darling brother Harry, is it possible that it is you?" and she was clasped to her brother's heart, for she stayed not to chide him for so cruelly frightening her. It was enough for her to know that the brother they had mourned as lost was before her.

When the excitement of meeting was over, and Harry had explained the reason of the report of his death by saying it had arisen from a severe wound which he had received in a Caraccian service while fighting against their haughty Russian oppressors, Bertha asked her husband how he had managed to meet him.

Mr. Russell said he was at the Tremont with a few friends, and as they were about to leave the hotel, the carriages from the night line came up, and his eye fell upon some baggage marked "Col. Henry Gordon." He was not long he said, in making the acquaintance of the gentleman, for in their youthful days they had sat over their wine in a private room. Mr. Russell explained to his brother-in-law, the cause of his absence at so late an hour from his young wife. He also told of his determination to make Bertha a domestic wife; for he was sure it would, in the end, increase her happiness as well as his own.

Harry conveyed the plan of proposing an exchange, for he was sure his bronzed complexion and altered figure would sufficiently disguise him. Mr. Russell did not object; he knew that his wife seldom lost her presence of mind in any emergency, for she had a strong intellect, as well as a loving heart, and the harsh words she had used he knew arose from an angry spirit disappointed to enquire if any accident had happened to her husband?

"Oh, no, Madam," he replied, "I come on quite a different errand; I just left your husband in very comfortable quarters, where he will probably remain for the present."

Then seeing that she seemed very much agitated, he added—

POETRY.

THE LUMBERMEN.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

Comrades! round our woodland quarters
Sad-voiced Autumn grieves:
Thickly down these swelling waters
Float his fallen leaves.
Through the tall and naked timber
Column-like and old,
Gleam the sunsets of November
With their skies of gold.

O'er us, to the south-land heading,
Screams the gray wild goose;
On the night-frost, sounds the treading
Of the stately moose.
Fast the streams with ice are closing,
Colder grows the sky,
Soon on lake and river frozen
Shall our log piles lie.

When, with sounds of smothered thunder,
On some night of rain,
Lake and river break asunder
Winter's weakened chain,
Down the wild March-flood shall bear them
The saw-mill's wheel,
Or, where steam, the slave shall tear them
With his teeth of steel.

Be it star-light, be it moon-light
In these values below,
When the earliest beams of sunlight
Streaks the mountain's snow,
Crisps the heart-frost keen and early
To our hurrying feet,
And the forest echoes clearly
All our blows repeat.

When the chrysalis Ambigoi's
Stretches broad and clear;
And Millonket's pine-black ridges
Hide the browsing deer;
Where through lakes and wild morasses,
Or through rocky walls,
Swift and strong Penobscot passes,
White with foamy falls.

Where, through clouds, are glimpses given
Of Katahdin's sides,—
Rock and forest piled to heaven
Turn and ploughed by slides;
Far below the Indian trapping
In the sunshine warm,
Far above the snow-cloud wrapping
Half the peak in storm!

Where are mossy carpets better
Than the Persian weaves,
And, than Eastern perfumes, sweeter
Seem the fading leaves;
And a music wild and solemn
From the pine-tree's height
Rolls its vast and sea-like volume
On the wind of night:

Make we here our camp of winter;
And though sleet and snow
Pitch knot and beechen splinter
On our heads shall grow:
Here, with mirth to lighten duty,
We shall lack alone
Woman, with her smile of beauty,
And her gentle tone.

But, her hearth is brighter burning
For our work to-day,
And her welcome at returning
Shall our loss repay.
Strike then, comrades!—Trade is waiting
On our rugged toil,
Far ships waiting for the freighting
Of our woodland spoil!

Ships, whose traffic links these highlands
Bleak and cold of ours
With the citron-planted islands
Of a clime of flowers;
To our forests the tribute bringing
Of eternal heat,
In our lap of winter flinging
Tropic fruit and sweets.

Cheerly on the axe of labor,
Let the sunbeam dance,
Better than the flash of sabre
Or the gleam of lance!
Strike!—With every blow is given
Freer sun and sky,
And the long-hid earth to heaven
Looks with wondering eye.

Loud behind us grow the murmurs
Of the age to come—
Clang of smiths, and tread of farmers
Bearing harvest home!
Here her virgin-lap with treasures
Has the green earth fill:
Waving wheat and golden maize—ears
Crown each beechen hill.

Keep who will the city's alleys,
Take the smooth-shaven plain,
Give to us the cedar valleys,
Rocks and hills of Maine!
In our North-land, wild and woody,
Let us still have part:
Rugged nurse and mother sturdy
Hold us to thy heart!

Oh, our free hearts beat the warmer
For thy breath of snow,—
And our tread is all the firmer
For thy rocks below,
Freedom, hand in hand with labor,
Walketh strong and brave;
On the forehead of his neighbor
No man writeth, Slave!

Brother looks on equal brother,
Manhood looks on men,—
Be thy future, oh our Mother,
As thy path hath been—
Heavenward, like thy mountain-gardians,
With their star-crowns decked,—
And thy watchword, like Katahdin's
Cloud-swept pine, "ERECT!"

The Boston Almanac for 1847,

BY S. N. DICKINSON.

WILL be published at an early day in December.
The Directory to the Business People of Boston, will be thoroughly prepared, and inserted at greater length than usual. As the business of the city increases, this department of our Almanac grows with it. In the number now coming out, there will be a series of DIAGRAMS representing the various RAIL ROADS diverging from Boston, with historical sketches of each. These diagrams or maps have been prepared at some considerable expense, and will, together with the Business Directory, form the principal features to the Almanac for 1847. The usual quantity of Miscellaneous Matter will be found in its pages. The covers will be illuminated with some choice specimens of printing, and the fine large Map of Boston, will be bound up in the volume.
Orders may be sent to Mr. D. M. MUSEY, 29 Cornhill, and to Mr. THOMAS GROOM, 82 State Street, or to the Proprietor, S. N. DICKINSON, 52 Washington Street. 6w Boston, Oct. 31

For the Quincy Patriot.

THE BOSTON WHIG.

In these days of party subservience, and northern servility to slaveholding interest, it is truly gratifying to know that a portion of the press, (that powerful instrument for good or for evil) are breaking away from party ties, so far at least as to make the great principles of Personal Freedom, Justice and Right, paramount to all other questions. In so doing they pursue a course consistent with the character of our free institutions, and with the Constitution itself. It is the political path of true wisdom and Christian duty. Other questions however, such as the Tariff, Finance, &c., receive due attention, but they consider them as they ought to be considered as secondary questions, and not in imitation of party hacks and self interested demagogues, of more importance to the well being of the country than the preservation of the immortal truths so well expressed in the Declaration of Independence. Among the number of independent presses there is no one that is exerting a better influence, or that stands higher in the estimation of the most intelligent, wise and patriotic citizens of the Commonwealth than the Boston Whig.

I would beg the favor to present through the columns of the Patriot a few extracts from the leading article in the Whig of Nov. 25th. I select from that article in particular, that your many readers, who have not seen the Whig, may be made acquainted with its true course, that they may judge for themselves why it is that its manly Editor has been by certain leading politicians in and out of the press stigmatized a "traitor."

"Let the politicians of the two great parties say what they may, and struggle as they will, there is in our minds not a shadow of doubt that the time is rapidly approaching, when it will be utterly impossible to rally the people of this great country upon appeals to merely secondary interests. Olden may read the results of the late elections as they like, to us they signify but one thing, and that is, that the old ties which have bound them together for twenty years have been stretched to bursting. There is now going on throughout the land a steady process of reconsideration of old opinions which has not yet shown itself in any very active form, but even the negative effects of which are pregnant with meaning. They have already made the cheek of almost every leading democrat turn pale, perplexed with fear of change, and even now they mingle no small portion of doubt with the note of exultation set up by every ardent whig. And for this there is manifestly excellent reason. The great body of the voters of the Union are in a transition state. There is no certainty in the past what their present support. The fact is becoming apparent that the old ones are losing, if they have not already lost, their force."

"Now we must venture, with our usual unwelcome boldness, to say to all the politicians, that they must make up their minds to the fact, that a contingency, when they can no longer 'avert their faces' from the sight of the great issue, which will, sooner or later, as surely override all others, as the sun shines at noon day. It is absolutely impossible for the country to go on with its present natural speed from bad to worse, in the career marked out for it by a class of public men who make the predominant and necessary the cardinal principle of action, as there is ever to be a stand for the principles of Liberty in America, it must be made now."

In comparison with this, every thing that is in our public affairs is as dust in the balance. It is impossible to look forward to the erection of a great part of this continent into a slave market, with principles utterly at war with and subversive of those which it was the purpose of the Revolution and of the Constitution to establish, and not to come down at once to the definition of something like a system of action, by which that measure may be either stayed, or else at any rate, deprived of its worst and most dangerous features.

"The experience of the past has shown, in a manner not to be mistaken, that in order to make a system like the one alluded to effective, it must be radical. There is no safety in temporary alliances of men acting in different parties, to resist this or that particular slaveholding measure. The experience of Texas proves enough to convince the most sceptical on this point. That which fails at one moment will be tried at another. That which meets with resistance from a temporary combination in one month will find no opposition when it is disbanded in the next. The rule of conquering by dividing, has been the most effective of all rules in the acquisition of slaveholding preponderance in the Union. There is no way of encountering it but by striking at the origin of the evil. It is slavery upon which must be concentrated the energy of the people of the Free States—slavery under the restrictions imposed by the constitution we admit, although slaveholders themselves pay no regard whatever to such restrictions, yet slavery, whenever and wherever it may be legitimately attacked."

"We do not mean to leave the whig party, unless indeed, it shall be perfectly clear to all eyes, that it has executed the same act of treachery to its professions which has already blasted the democratic party of the Free States. Still less do we propose to sanction the suicidal system of third parties. But no party ties shall bind us to sanction in whig candidates for public office the desertion of whig principles. We shall not flinch in this matter, whether we be in a minority of five hundred or of five. The times demand that somebody should take this lead in discussing the action of our public men. Our opinions may be erroneous, but they shall be honest and independent. They may be changed by the force of superior argument, but they will not be by abuse or denunciation, by threats or coaxing. We are open to conviction but we despise bullying."

"Our enterprise was begun at the lowest point to which the principles of Liberty ever fell in America. It shall be continued whilst there shall remain a reasonable hope of seeing them revive in the breasts of the majority of the people of the Union. But we have no compromises to make, at home or abroad, with any persons—high or low, great or small—who for any reason of timidity or treachery, of interest or passion, or expediency or of dishonesty, shall consent to barter them away. In our belief, it is not the right way to arrive at useful results, to refuse to make broad and strong lines of discrimination in the action of our public men. We shall, on this principle, venture to commend the course of every person who does his duty to freedom, even though the flag he may sail under be that of the present spurious democracy; and we shall not fail to censure, in the same manner, him who fails in that duty, in spite of the fact that his action may be endorsed by a constituency calling itself whig."

"Thus much we have written in order that there should be no pretence that we conceal our true intentions. We should seem to receive a single subscriber under any false idea of our position. When any individual can show the particular in which we have been untrue to the whig professions of Massachusetts, then indeed, but not until then, will they be able to show just cause why we should not adhere to our name."

Such is the political creed of the Boston Whig. Who can say it is not a just and honorable one! Who can denounce it as inconsistent with the Constitution, or as detrimental to the best interests of freemen! No one, and I believe that the denunciations which have been heaped upon the Whig by certain would be political gods, are not because such honest and patriotic sentiments are professed, but because the Whig acts and has acted consistent with its professions."

The Editor, I would add, is a native born citizen of Quincy, and he bids fair to be ranked with those notorious traitors, John Hancock and Samuel Adams, to which he gave birth more than one hundred years ago. It would not surprise me neither if it should be proved that he inherited the same traitorous sentiments that fired the heart of that most distinguished traitor in the Continental Congress, John Adams, (another citizen of Quincy.) In fact, methinks the above extracts seem to breathe the same bold, determined, traitorous spirit that John Adams uttered when his mild, dissipated, patriotic friend, Sewall, endeavored to dissuade him from attending the first Congress. He said, "The die is now cast; I have passed the Rubicon; swim or sink, live or die, survive or perish with my country is my unalterable determination."

E PLURIBUS UNUM.

For the Quincy Patriot.

LETTER FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

MR. EDITOR—The inclosed I received a few days ago. It is from a young man about twenty two years of age, a native of this place, who "listened" a few months since into the "Corps of Engineers" at Boston. This, however, he did with the full consent of his parents and friends. From his description of matters and things, one would infer that, as the old saying goes, he was "sorry he listened." Publish it, if you please. Yours, T. Milton, Dec. 6, 1846.

Encampment at Matamoros, Oct. 25, 1846.

RESPECTED SIR—Thinking that you might like to hear from one at the seat of war, and wishing to procure a few letters of introduction from you, to your friends in New Orleans, as we may return there in the Spring, I determined to write, hoping that you may not find these lines unworthy of perusal. I landed at Point Santiago, a low sandy island between Brazos Isabel and the mouth of the Rio Grande, with nothing like a tree or blade of grass upon it; in fact, it was any thing but a garden of Eden. I stopped there a week and then went to the mouth of the river, and from thence to this place, where we lie encamped. At the mouth of the river are the 1st Regiment Indiana Volunteers. Opposite Barrita are the 2d, and the 3d are with us, as also the 3d Ohio Volunteers and a Regiment of Illinois Volunteers together with a few regulars. The regiment of mounted riflemen from Kentucky have passed up to Camargo. Some of the Texan Rangers are down here occasionally. They are savage looking fellows, I assure you, and armed to the teeth. They fought like tigers at the storming of Monterey. We are now awaiting a steamer to take us up to Camargo. We lie on the side of the river, between the Mexican forts, Ampudia and Paredes, strong works but not equal to Fort Brown, on the opposite side of the river. The city is a hard looking place. In the best part of the place the streets are quite narrow and hemmed in on both sides by continuous lines of high brick walls, forming the fronts of houses and court yards. The houses have flat roofs and a few small, iron grated windows, seldom glazed, and often without any door on the street. This style of building gives a dreary and prisonlike appearance to the town. One would think half the blacklegs of the west and south were there, for the town is filled with billiard rooms, card tables, drinking houses and other tall places. It bears little appearance of a "terrible bombardment"; true, a few old houses have holes knocked through them, showing that somebody had been there, and they tell me that some forty or fifty Mexicans were killed and wounded, and this is "Matamoros in ashes—seven hundred Mexicans killed!"

The town is filled with vagabonds of all descriptions, and dogs in any quantity, each native having as many dogs as children. These all bark in concert at any disturbance in the night. Night before last I had a chance of enjoying its fine effect. A pack of wolves were crying on the opposite side of the river; this set all the dogs in the town barking, meanwhile a Mexican returning from a fandango, where he got busted, walked into a billiard room and grabbed the stakes, then took to his heels; the sentinel challenged him, he kept on and got the cartridge in his back; this raised a general alarm and the noise in consequence made night hideous. There is plenty of all sorts of game—deer, wild turkeys, geese, ducks, etc.

I cannot give you any news which can be depended upon, as all I hear are little else but camp rumors. It is said Gen. Wool has crossed the country from St. Louis with a considerable force of regulars and come in the rear of Ampudia, cutting off his retreat from Saltillo. Another is, that he has fell back on St. Louis Potosi. It is said that an attack is to be made on Vera Cruz by the navy, at the same time Tampico is to be attacked by forces from here and other places, under Gen. Patterson. However, you have more authentic information than I have. A story is going that 20,000 volunteers are to be raised from the North. I hope that no Yankee will be fool enough to trust himself to the tender mercies of Uncle Sam. If they do, they will "see the elephant" sooner than they would like for their own comfort. A word to the wise, etc. Pork and crackers, river water, seven dollars a month the pay of volunteers; whiskey one dollar a pint, bread twenty cents a pound, other necessities of life in proportion, glory thrown in,—fine chance for patriotic young men!

Please send me a few papers and answer this as soon as you may find it convenient, and if you wish I will write occasionally, as I could tell some pretty hard stories. Your humble servant,

BLUSHING. We love to see the rosy hue mounting over the neck and face of a beautiful woman, it shadows forth delicately and softly, the gentle feelings of the soul. It is the evidence of timidity, which is lovely in a woman. Out upon your masculine minds—out upon your rough sturdy genius; we prefer the red to the ash—ivy to oak. Woman's natural element is retirement; her home the domestic circle. Unfit by nature to baffle the world's waves, or mingle in its strife, she lives dependent on a strong spirit, and repays in kindness and gentleness that which she receives in protection and support.

KEEPING A SECRET. Some people find it the hardest thing in the world to keep a secret. The troublesome thing worries them so much that they feel obliged to call in three or four friends to help them keep it, until at last, it is in possession of so many that it is not considered worth keeping, and the tremendous secret becomes common property. We have heard it related of Washington, that he once had in view an important expedition, the direction of which he thought it prudent to be kept private, but he was teased very hard by one of the general officers to be told the particulars. At last Washington becoming tired of his importunity, said to him in a confiding tone—"Can you keep a secret?" "Yes," said the officer. "So can I," was the reply of Washington.

GOD'S POOR. Have you any old shoes, hats, caps, coats, pants, vests? Distribute them to the poor children in your neighborhood. God's poor are all about you, soliciting charity through their ragged clothing and protruding limbs. Be not backward in doing good. Open your ears to the cries of hunger and distress. Distribute what you have—anything will be acceptable but advice—do you know it? Angels hover over the path that leads to honest poverty—and they who pass it often receive a blessing from the skies.

MISCELLANY.

THE SHIPWRECK.

Will no one go for her? will no one go for my child? shrieked the miser wringing his hands, and running to and fro in the crowd,—but all turned away. There was scarcely a soul present who had not suffered at the hands of the hard-hearted money-lender.

Oh! for the love of God,—you who are fathers, think of me. My daughter will perish—will you not go for her, Townsend? I'll give you anything—anything in reason.

Go off for her? not I! said the man with a mocking laugh, shaking off the miser; all your gold would not tempt me on that boiling sea. Besides, ain't I a father too? and think you'll sacrifice my life for another? No, no, old hulk, you must take your gold and carry it to some other market.

Oh! she will die—my child, for whom I have saved all. Peter Jones, will you go if I will give you a thousand dollars?

No, not for ten thousand, gruffly answered the person addressed; a boat couldn't live in the breakers a moment.

I will give ten thousand to any one, eagerly said the miser—ten thousand dollars, I know you will go for ten thousand dollars, Simon, and he seized one of the spectators by the button of his shaggy jacket. Oh, go, and the blessings of a broken-hearted father will go with you.

I can't think of it if I'd never return to enjoy your money. No old man, he said in a more feeling tone than the others had used, your daughter must die.

Must die? Oh! no, she shan't die. Take all that I am worth good sirs, he said lifting up his hands imploringly, but restore me my daughter, only—only I hope you will spare us enough to live upon if it's no more than a beggar enjoys.

It's no use, old man, said the last speaker, the whole world would not tempt us out on a sea like this. It's a hard lot you've got to bear, and I pity your daughter, for she was a sweet angel. But the packet will go to pieces in half an hour, so you see there is no more hope.

The father heard the speaker in stony silence. Then he turned and looked out to sea, where a few minutes the outline of the stranded packet might be seen through the approaching twilight, almost buried in the whirling foam which howled on the bar on which she lay; but now darkness had shut her in from view, and the only knowledge that could be had of her position, was from the sound of her minute guns booming solemnly across the sea. The old man groaned and sinking down upon a board, buried his face in his hands, and rocked his body to and fro, occasionally pausing to listen to the guns, or gaze seaward, and then resuming his position, moaning continually. Five minutes must have passed, when a young man burst through the crowd and shaking the old man by the shoulder said:

Mr. Sterling, they say your daughter is on board that packet—it is so.

Yes, good youth, and you have come to rescue her, he exclaimed starting up with eager joy; but when he recognized the speaker, he said, in a tone of bitter disappointment, it's Harry Martin. Oh! surely, young man, you have not come to triumph over my distress?

God forbid, was the fervent reply; I came to aid you, if indeed, mortal can in an extremity like this. Let bygones be bygones. Only answer the one question, for no time is to be lost—will you give me your daughter, if I succeed in rescuing her.

There was a momentary pause, and the muscles of his face worked convulsively. All pressed forward to hear his answer, for the fury with which the old man pursued his daughter's lover, and the declarations that he would sooner see her dead than married to the young man, were known to every listener.

At length he gasped—

Yes, yes, but go at once. Only save her, and she shall be yours.

The youth paused no longer, but dashed through the crowd. In a minute his boat was afloat, and, accompanied by one solitary individual—for but one fisherman, and he under great obligations to the young man, could be persuaded to risk his life with the wave—set forth. The boat rose gallantly on the waves, shaking like a duck, the white spray from her sides; and for a minute was seen momentarily cutting the outlines of the gloomy sky, as she attained the summit of a billow; then she gradually pressed into the darkness, and was seen no more.

For more than an hour the crowd remained on the beach, almost incredulous of the lover's success, yet lingering in the faint hope that he might return with his precious freight. That he had the good wishes of all, was evident from the eagerness with which they strained their eyes into the gloom, to see if he was returning, and the audible prayers for his success which were breathed by more than one of the women. Apart from the general crowd, stood the fisherman, whom the miser had last appealed to, surrounded by a few kindred spirits, who were discussing with him the chances of the young man's return.

It was madness to attempt it, said the fisherman, but when I found he would go, I insisted that he should make his conditions with the old man before he ventured; for you see if his daughter was once restored to the old miser's arms, mighty little gratitude would he have for her preserver, who would stand as poor a chance as ever. Between us, I think she thought as much of the young man, as he did of her, and if her father sent her away, as I more than suspect, to drive Martin from her thoughts, the present danger would seem something like the retribution of a higher power as a punishment for his conduct. But hark! was not that a halloo?

Every eye was turned seaward in the direction that the fishermen had indicated that he had heard the hail, but nothing could be seen except the white breakers in the foreground, and the lowering clouds behind, forming a chaotic mass of darkness. Nor was any sound, save that of the roaring of the tempest, borne to the ear.

Hark! at length said another one, there it is again.

Every one listened, and now a halloo was heard faintly through the gloom seaward. One of the fishermen shouted, and a reply was distinctly caught in the lull of the tempest. A few minutes of breathless suspense followed, during which every eye was strained to its utmost.

There it is, at length cried one, see—just rising on yonder wave!

I see it, shouted another.

Here they come, huzza! huzza! a miracle, a miracle! ah, how gallantly she breasts the surge! were the exclamations that burst from the crowd.

All rushed to the edge of the surf—now the fear arose that the boat would swamp in the breakers, and many a heart trembled as she rose and fell fearfully on the surge, showers of spray flying over her and the water continually pouring into her sides. The crowd watched her struggles with silent awe.

A few moments more removed all doubt, and saw the hardy crew and their lovely freight safely landed on the beach. The miser had started from his seat at the first intimation of the approaching boat, and stood tremblingly gazing at her as she buffeted the waves; and no sooner did she touch the ground, than he rushed into the retiring surf, and frantically clung around his daughter, till the fishermen were forced to carry them both to dry land. There they would have separated the two for a moment; but when they spoke to the old man they found him lifeless. The emotions of the last two hours had been too much for his enfeebled frame, and he died in the sudden revulsion from despair to joy.

The good folks of that good village can yet tell you how, after the accustomed period of mourning, the miser's daughter gave her hand to Harry Martin, who received with her a fortune which even the most sanguine confessed to be beyond their expectations. But this was the least part of the treasure brought him by his wife, and in her virtues he had ample recompense for the long years of opposition on the part of her parent.

HEATED ROOMS. Rooms heated with anthracite coal, and rooms heated with close stoves in which wood is burnt, have very dry atmospheres. The use of water in such rooms is very congenial to health, but the water should not be placed in an iron or tin vessel upon the stove, for the reason that it will undergo that degree of heat which will make its vapors offensive and injurious to breathe. It is as injurious to the human system to breathe putrid water vapors of this kind, as it is to breathe the vapors from stagnant ponds in lot weather. If water is used upon a stove, an iron pan should be made use of, and this filled with dry sand; in the sand set an earthen bowl filled with clean water, which should be changed twice a day, and the bowl washed and kept as clean as if used for a drinking vessel. When hard coal is burned in a grate glass globe suspended in the room, filled with clean pure water, and as the heated air rises to the top of the room it will steadily evaporate the water and moisten the dry and heated air. Persons who prefer the atmosphere of salt water vapor, can add salt to the water, or if they prefer an aromatic atmosphere, they can add Cologne water, or any other perfume which they prefer. It is as important to have clean air for breathing as to have clean water for drinking. Basement rooms, where hard coal is burnt, should be frequently ventilated. Small children accustomed to stay in basement rooms, find a bad air near the floor. This air should be removed by allowing the doors to be opened frequently to let in fresh air. A little care in these matters will tend wonderfully to comfort and enjoyment.

HOGS AND MANURE. Among the best manufacturers of manure, the hog stands pre-eminent—hence, it should be the object of every farmer and planter, to see that his hog sties are all supplied with such substances as are convertible into the food of plants. Each woodland is a prolific source of the very material to be thrown to the hogs to be worked up into vegetable nutriment. The leaves of every description of trees, the mould of the forest, and the decomposing twigs, pine slitters, and all else of vegetable origin therein to be found, are fertile of those elements which give vitality to and ensure the healthful growth of crops. Give those to your hogs and they will speedily convert them into good manure, and so commingle them together, as to form a compost so nicely assimilated as to defy the chemist to improve its quality.

ANTI-SLAVERY MEETING.
The Norfolk County Anti-Slavery Society held its quarterly meeting at Quincy, on Thursday, the 5th ult., in the Town Hall. Owing to the inclemency of the weather, the Society held no meeting on Wednesday afternoon, as advertised; but a respectable audience was addressed in the evening by Messrs. Pillsbury and Moody.

On Thursday, there was a numerous attendance of members and friends of the Society from Quincy, Weymouth, Dorchester, Milton, Dedham, Hingham, Abington, Plymouth, and other towns. In the evening, the hall was entirely filled with a most intelligent and attentive audience.

The following resolutions, reported by Wendell Phillips, as chairman of the business committee, were adopted, after being fully discussed by Messrs. Phillips, Hiram W. Blanchard, Quincy, Pillsbury, Moody, Rand, Increase S. Smith, and others:

Resolved—That in the escape of the slave George from illegal violence and restraint at New York, we hail one solitary triumph of justice and humanity; and rejoicing, as we do, in this evidence of a correct public feeling which cheered the slave's friends and overpowered the too willing agents of the master, we mourn that our capital should present such a sad contrast in the utter deadness of public feeling and entire supineness of the police as to the recent atrocious violation of law, justice and humanity, of which this community has been the witness.

Resolved—That while some are pointing public indignation at Messrs. Pearson and Hannum for their infamous violation of the law and insult to the character of this Commonwealth, our minds rest rather on the cause why such men are found to blot the fair fame of our country;—and in our opinion it is because that antiquated and religious sentiment, which men call the Church of Christ, has been utterly recreant to its duty;—else Southern plantations would not recruit their overseers from New England villages, nor Southern States find the sternest supporters of their laws among Boston merchants.

Resolved—That, apart from the moral view of this subject, we see in the slave system a great moneyed interest closely allied with large political power; and, in this age, when the dustiest cannot but perceive that wealth, and especially associated wealth, is one of the strongest, if not the strongest, in the governing influences of every nation, we cannot hope, while melted with slaveholding States into one common nation, to escape the uniform tendency of the age; especially while upon this close corporation of slaveholders the Constitution has conferred a greater amount of political power than would naturally have fallen to their share.

Resolved—That, on our opinion, the Union is, next to the so-called church, the main bulwark of slavery; and that whatever may be the character of the Constitution, and whatever may have been the wishes of the Northern States, it is still a fact, in the words of J. Q. Adams, that a "knot of slaveholders have given the law and prescribed the policy of the country";—and made "the preservation, propagation and perpetuation of slavery the vital and animating spirit of the National Government."

Resolved—That while some are trusting to new forms of party organization, and others to the hope of Constitutional amendments for the overthrow of this supremacy of the Slave Power;—this use of the nation's influence to rivet fetters—the experience of half a century convinces us that there are, beneath the parchment, elements of political strength and activity which override statutes, and bonds of union which laugh to scorn the strength of party attachments; and while these elements of strength remain in the hands of the slaveholders, and these bonds of union knit together the slave interest, as they uniformly have done, it is vain to rely on party or parchment to curb their power and their aggressions; hence we feel bound to proclaim, as heretofore, our trust in the nobler and nobler motto of "NO UNION WITH SLAVEHOLDERS!"

Resolved—That, though we have long since abjured the Cognition and quitted the heliot-box, still we cannot but warn our fellow-citizens who still cling to them, against the crime and folly of endorsing by their votes that candidate for the Governor's chair, who, forgetting his own repeated and solemn declarations—regardless of the honor and duty of the State whose highest office he degraded and disgraced—did lately set the seal of the Commonwealth's sanction to this atrocious outrage on Mexico and justice—this crusade of kidnappers and pirates—this marshalling of a free people to steal a slave colony—while northern abettors, nslanded by their own infamous participations, try to dignify with the brutal, though comparatively honorable name, of a war!

ANNE W. WESTON, Secretary.

Nearly thirty thousand dollars in specie has been brought up from the wreck of the old steamer Tennessee near Milliken's Bend, within ten days, by the diving bell. The wreck is in the mud, twenty-eight feet below the surface of the Mississippi.

The troops which Gov. Ford of Illinois, marched into Nauvoo have been disbanded, but seventy men, forming a military police, will remain to preserve order.

The sale of gun cotton in Bavaria has been prohibited by the Government, on the ground that as it cannot by its appearance be distinguished from ordinary cotton, its sale may give rise to accidents.

It is charged, that the new preparation for producing insensibility to pain, is capricious and uncertain in its effects on different constitutions; producing unnatural excitement and even fury in some, in others almost a total suspension of vitality.

A present of a very heavy cheese, was sent from Connecticut, to the Postmaster General, but instead of being sent as a package by the agency, some mischievous person sent it by mail, the postage on which was one hundred and twenty dollars. The Postmaster General declined receiving the present, and it has been sent as usual to the dead letter office.

The Common Council of the city of New York have appropriated one thousand dollars to meet the expenses of organizing the first regiment of volunteers for Mexico.

Fifty persons, indicted by the Grand Jury of Middlesex County, in this State, for violations of the License Law, defaulted and would not stand trial.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE. This annual document from the President reached Boston late on Wednesday evening. It is of great length, extremely well written, and a straight-forward, statesmanlike paper. The following brief summary, extracted from the Boston Bee, gives the principal features of the Message. On account of the space it occupies we are unable to find room for its entire publication, but may hereafter make some extracts.

"It begins with the usual congratulations on the general condition of the country, and its very amicable relations with (except in a single instance) all the nations of the earth. It then branches and comments at great length upon the subject of the war with Mexico, which it says, was neither desired nor provoked by the United States. It goes back to the remote causes of the rupture, and gives the whole history of Mexico's insults and aggressions, her sins of omission as well as commission, which were the more immediate forerunners of actual hostilities;—proving conclusively to every candid and unbiased mind, that the provocation for a declaration of War, upon the part of the United States, was ample, and much more than sufficient. The subject of the different boundaries claimed, is considered in full. It speaks in terms of satisfaction of the conduct of the army, thus far, but opines that successful termination of the war will be materially aided by an appropriation of money to be disbursed at the discretion of the Executive—and for such a course of Congress cites a precedent which occurred during the administration of Jefferson, at whose disposal there were placed two millions of dollars.

The rest of the message is occupied with some praise of the new tariff, a recommendation for the establishment of a mint at New York, a desire to see the defects in the detail of the Sub-Treasury remedied, a proposal to reduce the price of the public lands, and a report of the condition of the mail service."

FATAL ACCIDENT. Den. John Sullivan of this town, seventy-seven years of age, met with an accident last Wednesday afternoon, which resulted in his death early Friday morning. He fell from the top of a load of hay to the ground, receiving a heavy blow upon the back of his neck, producing concussion on the nervous system, from which retraction did not take place owing to his advanced age and the severity of his injuries.

Dea. Sullivan formerly resided in Boston for many years, and his funeral will take place in the city next Tuesday, from the residence of his son-in-law, in Allen Street.

WATER WORKS. The job for building the great Reservoir on Beacon Hill in Boston, has been given by the Water Commissioners, to Messrs. Carriehall, Gonder & Co. The Boston Herald says "that there were some twenty-five proposals from our own city, and adjoining towns, [doubtless several of them from Quincy] each of which would several thousand dollars less than that of the favored contractors." If the above statement be true, and our granite contractors are interested, we hope they will at once probe the matter to a full and public investigation.

LARGE HOGS. There was slaughtered in this town, the present week, by Mr. Jonathan Cook, three large hogs, the first belonging to Mr. Charles Curtis, weighing six hundred and ten pounds, and the other two to Mr. Adam Curtis, weighing five hundred and ninety-one pounds and five hundred and fifty-one pounds.

The Dover (N. H.) Telegraph has an account of a hog slaughtered in that place, which weighed five hundred and seventy-eight pounds. Friend Crockett must look around for "porkers" before he squeals too loud!

HON. ISAAC H. WRIGHT. This gentleman, it will be seen by the notice in another column, will address the citizens of this place next Monday evening. Mr. W. is engaged in enlisting a Company of Volunteers, and is undoubtedly fully competent to lead them "to the conflict"; and those under his command will doubtless find him one of the right sort. Go and hear him on Monday evening.

ENLISTING. An opportunity is now afforded to the brave and patriotic, in this town and vicinity, to enlist for the Mexican war. Mr. Abner B. Packard, whose notice may be found in our columns, to-day, has been duly empowered by the authorities of this State to raise a company of volunteers.

QUINCY LIGHT INFANTRY. This military corps, which has been in existence fifty-six years, has been disbanded. There is so little encouragement at present given to volunteer companies that in a few years scarcely one will remain in the Commonwealth. There are strong reasons in support of an efficient volunteer military force.

MEXICO. No further intelligence from Mexico since last week. Interesting news may soon be expected. Energetic movements have doubtless been made by the American army.

Attention is called to the advertisement of a lost Valise. It contains the clothes of a gentleman on a journey, and the loss causes him much inconvenience.

CONGRESS. There was a quorum in both branches of Congress on the first day of the meeting. The doings thus far received relate to business of no general interest. We shall give weekly a full synopsis of congressional proceedings.

Ex-President Adams is slowly gaining his health, but his friends entertain doubts whether he will so far recover as to be able this winter to visit Washington.

FROM EUROPE. The steamer Caledonia arrived at Boston on Saturday last, bringing Liverpool papers to the 18th ult.

The American provision trade was dull. The money market was easy. The steamer Great Britain had not been got off.

Accounts of suffering by famine, and from the recklessness of legal restraint, continue to come from Ireland. The large supplies of American corn have proved insufficient.

Thomas Moore, the bard of Erin, is dangerously ill—the sun of his life is fast setting.

The subject of general education is receiving some attention in England. The cholera is making fearful ravages in several cities in Arabia.

A report to the French Minister of Public Works estimates that the damages by the floods will require upwards sixty-five million francs to repair them.

TEXAS. T. Pillsbury, (dem.) has been re-elected to Congress from the western district, and D. S. Kaufman, (dem.) from the eastern—the former by a large majority over his opponent, and the latter without opposition.

ARAB PROVERBS. If a friend is made of honey, do not eat him all up. If you travel through the country of the blind, be blind yourself. When you are the amvil, have patience; when you are the hammer, strike straight and well. He who cannot take a hint, will not comprehend a long explanation. The mother of a murdered man may sleep, but the mother of a murderer cannot. I like the head of a dog better than the tail of a lion.

THE LICENSE LAWS. The annual term of the Supreme Court of the United States commenced at Washington on Monday last. The constitutionality of the Massachusetts License Laws will probably be one of the first cases brought before the court, and we hope a decision will then be given.

UNITED STATES VESSEL LOST. The United States ship-of-war Boston, which lately sailed for the Gulf of Mexico, was wrecked on the 15th of November last, upon the Island of Eleuthera, one of the Bahama Islands. The vessel is high on the beach, and will probably be a total loss. The crew—two hundred and fifty persons—were saved.

NEW TRIAL. The Municipal Court of Boston has granted a new trial in the case of Commonwealth vs. George W. Gerauld. A new term will soon commence.

DIVIDEND. The Old Colony Railroad Corporation have declared a three per cent. dividend for the last six months.

FRIEND ROBINSON of the Norfolk Democrat should balance accounts before he complains. "First cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

The Directors of the Western Railroad have declared a dividend of three dollars per share for the past five months' earnings. This is at the rate of seven and a quarter per cent. per annum.

The Government has advertised for ten thousand army blankets, one hundred and sixty thousand yards of Canton flannel, two hundred and eighty-six thousand yards of unbleached cotton, one hundred and fifty thousand yards shirting, two thousand uniform dragon caps, eight thousand engineer, artillery and infantry caps, one hundred and eighty thousand pairs of faced booties, and ten thousand dozen woolen stockings.

The contrast between the post-office receipts from the free and slave states is remarkable. The number of letters in the free states for October was about two millions—in the slave states less than one half.

The town council of Columbia (S. C.) has appropriated two thousand dollars for the outfit of the company of volunteers from that district; and the Committee in the State Legislature has recommended to that body the appropriation of twenty thousand dollars for the regiment in behalf of the State.

Twenty-eight persons were complained of in the Police Court of Boston, in one day, for allowing snow to lay on their sidewalks more than six hours. Among them were two Aldermen, the City Solicitor, and other distinguished citizens.

Charles B. Goodrich, Esq., has been nominated by the democrats of Boston, as their candidate for Mayor at the ensuing election.

The marine Insurance offices are not likely to make large dividends next January. Their losses have been severe during the past month or two.

The ill-fated Atlantic, with her furniture, cost over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. There was only thirty-five thousand dollars marine insurance on her, so that the actual loss to the Company must be more than one hundred thousand dollars.

Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, and John J. Crittenden have each a son engaged in the pending war with Mexico. The first is Lieutenant Colonel of a regiment of Kentucky volunteers; the second, Captain of a company of volunteers about to proceed to Mexico; and the third, a Captain in the new regiment of Mounted Riflemen.

In Mercer County (N. J.) lately, a farmer's daughter was awarded four hundred and fifty dollars to comfort her for the desertion of her spark, after a year's courtship; and at Bristol, (R. I.) a young tailor got a verdict for two hundred and sixty dollars against a steady farmer of sixty, pretty well to do, who "kept company" with her some months, appointed a day for the wedding, but when the day came, and the company, and the clergy, sent word that he "had gin it up."

NOTICES.

Quincy Volunteers!
A public meeting of all those citizens of Quincy, favorable to the formation of a Volunteer Company, for the Mexican War, will be held at the Town Hall, on MONDAY EVENING next, Dec. 14th, at seven o'clock.

The meeting will be addressed by Hon. Isaac H. Wright.

The Committee who were chosen by the Town, on the 8th inst., to act in conjunction with the Supervisors of the Adams Temple and School Fund, in relation to the building of an Academy, would give notice that they will meet in the Lyceum Room, on MONDAY EVENING, Dec. 14th, at half past six o'clock.

The citizens who have any objections to offer, or suggestions in favor of establishing such a school, are requested to be present, in conformity with a vote of the town.

GEORGE NEWCOMB, Chairman.
A meeting of the "Union Board" will be held at the Temperance Reading Room, next MONDAY EVENING, at half past six o'clock precisely.

S. ADAMS, Secretary of the Board.
A public social Temperance Meeting will be held in the Temperance Reading Room, THIS EVENING, at half past six o'clock.

The public are invited to attend.

PROCRASTINATION IS THE THIEF OF TIME.
Delay is dangerous—neglect that Cold and Cough a few weeks, and the hope of recovery will be lost to you forever. Let not any pecuniary consideration deter you from trying to save your life and health, while there is a chance. Consumption is annually sweeping off thousands to the tomb; no disease has baffled the skill of the physician like it; no physician perhaps, has ever done more for this large class of suffering humanity, than Dr. Wistar. An "ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," therefore before your lungs become ulcerated, that no human means can save you from an early grave, try in season, try at once, a Medicine that has been of such infinite value to thousands—obtain a bottle of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, take it, get another, if necessary, persevere in using it, until you have removed the disease entirely, which if neglected will terminate your life. Be not deceived by quacks, with their imitations and counterfeits; buy none but the genuine and original, which is signed I. BUTTS on the wrapper.

JAYNE'S EXPECTORANT. This medicine has clearly proved itself to be all that it has been recommended by, those who have given it a fair test in this country, and the demand for it increases daily. We have just heard of an important cure of Asthma, which has been effected by the use of it in a neighboring town—the case was that of a female who had for a long time been under the care of a physician, but had received no relief, and her case was considered hopeless. As a last resort she purchased a bottle of Dr. Jayne's Expectorant, which caused her to expectorate freely, gradually eased her cough, and rapidly restored her to health. We have no hesitation in saying that this preparation of Dr. Jayne, for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Asthma, Consumptions, etc., is the most valuable medicine ever offered to the American public. There is no quackery about it—Dr. Jayne is one of the most skillful practicing physicians in Pennsylvania and wherever his various preparations have been thoroughly tested, he is looked upon as a great public benefactor.—*Sunerset (Me.) Bargains! and no mistake!
THE subscriber will make improvements, and if those indebted will aid him, contemplates erecting a new store on his present site, early the ensuing Spring, and therefore to further the plan offers his present varied and extensive stock of Foreign and Domestic Goods with a large assortment of excellent Groceries, etc.,
at the lowest possible cash prices.
There is no mistake about my intentions of improving or building a new store, and the public can see my object for offering my stock of ENGLISH and WEST INDIA GOODS at reduced prices, and purchasers may therefore expect Bargains.
All Notes and Accounts must be soon adjusted, and it is hoped that a hint on this subject will be sufficient.
I HAVE recently received a very full assortment of Fall and Winter Goods, and buyers will find it to their advantage to call, at least before purchasing elsewhere.

Public Notice.
THE proprietors of the "Quincy Bookstore" present their most sincere acknowledgments to this community, for the patronage that has been bestowed upon their establishment, and respectfully solicit the continuance in proportion to their attention to business and to the wants of their customers, which they are confident can here be supplied as satisfactorily, in every respect, as at any other place.
To the purchasers of SCHOOL BOOKS, we say, that our list comprises all that are used in the various public and private schools in this and the neighboring towns, and that we will sell them singly to individuals, to Teachers for the supply of their schools, or to Traders for their own customers, at the lowest market cash prices.
Those in want of BLANK BOOKS are informed, that we can supply them with any style or quality, at prices varying according to the quality, but all as low as any person can afford to sell them.
Our stock of STATIONERY is amply sufficient for the supply of this market, well selected, and will be sold at fair prices.
We invite all in want of MISCELLANEOUS, JUVENILE or TOY BOOKS, to examine our assortment before looking elsewhere, as we are sure that selections can be made that will be suitable.
We have also a great variety of Pocket Books, Wallets, Pocket and Pen Knives, Scissors, Thermometers, Combs, Brushes, with a general assortment of Fancy Goods which cannot be enumerated, but which we shall be happy to exhibit to all who may call upon us.
We again call your attention to our CIRCULATING LIBRARY, from which at a moderate charge by the single volume, or year, we can furnish reading of popular character.
We also receive subscriptions for, and supply all Periodicals, free of postage.
In the BINDERY connected with the Store the most careful attention will be given to binding Periodicals, old Books, Music, &c.
To all we say "encourage home manufacture, and patronize home enterprise and industry in preference to foreign."

Public Notice.
THE proprietors of the "Quincy Bookstore" present their most sincere acknowledgments to this community, for the patronage that has been bestowed upon their establishment, and respectfully solicit the continuance in proportion to their attention to business and to the wants of their customers, which they are confident can here be supplied as satisfactorily, in every respect, as at any other place.
To the purchasers of SCHOOL BOOKS, we say, that our list comprises all that are used in the various public and private schools in this and the neighboring towns, and that we will sell them singly to individuals, to Teachers for the supply of their schools, or to Traders for their own customers, at the lowest market cash prices.
Those in want of BLANK BOOKS are informed, that we can supply them with any style or quality, at prices varying according to the quality, but all as low as any person can afford to sell them.
Our stock of STATIONERY is amply sufficient for the supply of this market, well selected, and will be sold at fair prices.
We invite all in want of MISCELLANEOUS, JUVENILE or TOY BOOKS, to examine our assortment before looking elsewhere, as we are sure that selections can be made that will be suitable.
We have also a great variety of Pocket Books, Wallets, Pocket and Pen Knives, Scissors, Thermometers, Combs, Brushes, with a general assortment of Fancy Goods which cannot be enumerated, but which we shall be happy to exhibit to all who may call upon us.
We again call your attention to our CIRCULATING LIBRARY, from which at a moderate charge by the single volume, or year, we can furnish reading of popular character.
We also receive subscriptions for, and supply all Periodicals, free of postage.
In the BINDERY connected with the Store the most careful attention will be given to binding Periodicals, old Books, Music, &c.
To all we say "encourage home manufacture, and patronize home enterprise and industry in preference to foreign."

POETRY.

WINTER AND AGE.

Grey Winter loveth silence. He is old,
And liketh not the sporting of the lambs,
Nor the shrill song of birds. It irketh him
To hear the forest melodies; though still
He giveth license to the rufian winds,
That, with black foreheads and distended cheeks,
Mutter hoarse thunders on their wrecking path.

He lays his finger on the lip of streams,
And they are ice, and stays the merry foot
Of the slight riuilet, as it leapeeth down,
Terrace by terrace, from the mountain's head.
He silenth the purling of the brook,
That told its tale in gentle Summer's ear,
All day long reprobates, and doth bid
Sharp frosts chastise and chain it, till it shrink Abash'd away.

He sits with wrinkled face,
Like some old grandire, ill at ease, who shuts
The noisy tramping of the children out,
And, drawing nearer to the pleasant fire,
Doth settle on his head the velvet cap,
And bless his stars for quiet once again.
Stern Winter drives the trout fountain back
To the dark caverns of the imprisoned echo,
And dead'neith, with his drifted snows, the sound
Of wheel and foot-tramp.

Thus it is, with man,
When the chill winter of his life draws on.
The ear doth loathe the sounds that erst it loved,
Or, like some moody hermit, bar the door,
Though sweetest tones solicit it in vain.
The eye grow weary of the tarnished scenes
And old wind-shaken tapestries of times,
While all the languid senses anticipate
The Sabbath of the tomb.

The echoing round
Of giddy pleasures, where his heart in youth
Disported eagerly—the rushing tread
Of the great, gorgeous world, are sought to him,
Who has journeyed to a clime unknown,
Would to the skirts of holy silence cling,
And let all sounds and symphonies of earth
Fall, like a faded vestment, from the soul.

THE IRRESOLUTE.

Go ahead!—though dark clouds should surround you,
They may all disappear on the morrow;
There are others far worse off around you,
And yet are unconquered by sorrow.
Keep trying—you should always keep trying,
And never give up till you're dead,
You can never excel by your sighing,
You must reverse yourself up—go ahead!

To do what man has done before you—
There's no kind of merit in that;
But to finish what he's done is thought of
Is what you should strive to be at.
There are ten-thousand things to discover,
On which a new light you may shed;
And be you a scholar or lover,
Write out on your flag—"go ahead!"

And when she whom you love should reject you,
And tell you that you must forget,
Let our soul-stirring motto direct you,
I'll warrant you'll marry her yet.
With the heart of a man in your bosom,
And soul, whom you will you may wed;
O, never despair, but keep striving,
And say to yourself, "go ahead!"

NATURE'S NOBLEMAN.

Away with false fashion, so calm and so chilly,
Where pleasure itself cannot please;
Away with cold breeding, that faithlessly still,
Affects to be quite at his ease;
For the deepest in feeling is highest in rank,
The freest is first in the band,
And nature's own nobleman, friendly and frank,
Is a man with a heart in his hand.

Fearless in honesty, gentle yet just,
He warmly can love and can hate;
Nor will he bow down with his face in the dust
To Fashion's intolerant state;
For best in good breeding, and highest in rank,
Though lowly or poor in the land,
Is nature's own nobleman, friendly and frank,
The man with his heart in his hand.

His fashion is passion, sincere and intense,
His impulses simple and true,
Yet tempered by judgment, and taught by good sense
And cordial with me and with you;
For the finest in manners as highest in rank,
It is you, man! or you, man! who stand
Nature's own nobleman, friendly and frank,
A man with his heart in his hand.

ANECDOTES.

A person who suspected that a minister at his acquaintance was not truly orthodox, went to him and said—"Sir, I am told that you are against the perseverance of the saints." "Not I, indeed," answered the minister, "it is the perseverance of the sinners that I oppose." "But that is not a satisfactory answer, sir. Do you think that a child of God can fall very low, and yet be restored?" He replied, "I think it will be very dangerous to try the experiment."

"Father, aint it wicked to pitch, Thanksgiving day?" "Yes, my son." "Well, Deacon Brown did it last Thanksgiving, any how; he pitched the tune, in the meeting."

An attorney, about to furnish a bill of costs, was requested by his client, a baker, to "make it as light as possible." "Ah!" replied the attorney, "that is the way you say to your foreman, but that's not the way I make my bread."

A big boy who displayed a dangling watch chain, was asked—"What time, Joseph?" He drew forth his watch and after asking another "is this figure four or figure seven?" replied "It lacks just about half an inch to eight."

MISCELLANY.

THE CAPTAIN'S STORY.

"Talking of circumstantial evidence, I can tell you a story, in point, of an affair that happened within my own personal knowledge, if you wish to hear it."

The speaker was one of a group that stood upon the promenade deck of the Empire, one day last summer, as she glided among the glories of the Hudson, on her downward passage from the political capital of the State to the commercial and financial capital of the Union. This group had been collected by an animated discussion between two professional-looking disputants, respecting the necessity and propriety of killing men as a punishment for murder. The members of it were apparently all strangers to each other, and to the disputants, one of whom, from his appearance in general, and his white cravat in particular, and from his frequent quotations from scripture—his constant reiteration of such phrases as "divine vengeance," "holy indignation," "God's immutable laws," etc., his wordy rhetoric, false logic, and bad temper, I took to be of that small class of narrow-minded and short-sighted religionists, who are ever ready to brand reform with the reproach of infidelity; who fancy an earthquake endangering the foundation of God's church in every step of human improvement—who look upon every discovery in science as an attack upon Moses—every new moral maxim as an insult to Solomon—every philanthropic movement as a contempt of our Saviour; a class who seem to think the very devil and slaver of the pilgrims essential to the existence of the shrine; and who, by this sort of nasty conversation, do more harm to the cause of religion than all the infidels in the world; more harm than their liberal and enlightened brethren of the cloth are able to counteract.

The conversation, at first so spirited as to excite the interest and attention of a number of ladies, who had moved themselves up so as to be within hearing, had begun to flag. The arguments for and against had been pretty nearly exhausted, and the combatants were beginning, in the lull of the battle, to draw off their polemical cohorts, preparatory to a peace, both parties satisfied with the ult possidetis although the spectators could distinguish no great difference between it and the status quo ante bellum. It was at this opportune moment that the speaker, a square-built, red-faced, comfortable-looking man, proposed to tell his story. Of course, there was a general expression of assent; so clearing his throat with a preparatory "hem," and stowing his quid a little more compactly, after shifting it from star-board to larboard, he began:

"I am a sailor, or rather was, for it is a good many years since I gave up ploughing the deep, and took to turning furrows upon the land. Just forty years ago I was in command of a little full rigged brig, called the Moresco, belonging to Baltimore. We were bound for Liverpool, and from there to the Cape De Verdes, for a cargo of salt, and thence home. My crew consisted of three men and a boy, rather short handed you may think for a long voyage, but sailors were in demand, and my vessel was a little bit of a thing, and required few to manage her; besides, I was young then, and felt myself about equal to the watch of a small frigate alone; and in addition there was the mate, who had come on board of me, with the reputation of being as active an officer as ever stepped across a ship's gangway. Mr. Clark, James C. Clark, I think, was his name, was a young man, about thirty, but he had been to sea pretty much all his life.

This Mr. Clark had the reputation of being a good sailor and an active officer, but it was said that he never could get a crew to sail with him a second time; and that more than once he had to secrete himself while his ship was in port, and to join her
